ELVIS MORBID?

A book based on 300 hours of taped interviews with three bodyguards fired by Elvis Presley claims the rock and roll star took a variety of drugs, thought he was a prophet, was morbidly fascinated with corpses and tried to put out a contract on the man he thought stole his wife, Priscilla.

The allegations are contained in Elvis: What Happened? by National Star reporter Steve Dunleavy. The book was published Aug. 1 with little fanfare and a press run of 400,000, but since Presley's death Tuesday presses have spun out 250,000 more copies and the publishers have been swamped with orders. ## Jobless Welfare Cut Off

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Individuals awaiting unemployment insurance benefits will be cut off welfare except in emergency situations, Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm announced today.

Vander Zalm said the new policy is contained in amendments to the Guaranteed Available Income for Need Act (GAIN) approved Thursday by cabinet.

"Changes in the federal UIC (Unemployment Insurance Commission) have forced us to redefine our welfare policies so that only those people in emergency situations will be able to collect benefits while awaiting UIC," said Vander Zalm.

"The federal government has extended the qualification period from eight to 12 weeks and this new (provincial) regulation will ensure that those waiting for UIC will use their final paycheck or savings before coming to the human resources branch for welfare."

Persons laid off or fired must now wait two weeks before receiving any UIC benefits, while those who quit must wait eight weeks.

Alan Stubbs, programs coordinator in the ministry, said figures haven't been kept on the numbers of people applying for welfare while awaiting UIC benefits, "but from our best estimates, that waiting period is the second largest reason for people applying for welfare."

Destination, he added, is the main reason people go to welfare for assistance.

Stubbs said that welfare will still aid people awaiting UIC benefits but only in emergencies.

"There's no specific definition of what constitutes an emergency," he said. "That depends on the discretion of our staff in the field."

RESIGNATION REJECTED

EDMONTON (CP) — J. Martin Hattersley, president of the Social Credit Party of Canada, announced Thursday he had declined to accept the resignation of MP Gilbert Ronsau (SC-Shefford, Que.).

Mattersley said Ronsau has been a member in good standing for 33 years and he had requested him to continue as a member of the national party.

Times News Service

ST. ANDREWS N.B. — The provincial premiers' stand against Quebec's proposed reciprocal education language agreement hardened Thursday with a majority in opposition.

Premier Bill Bennett joined Saskatchewan's Premier Allan Blakeney and four other premiers in opposing the proposal.

Bennett told reporters at the premier's conference here that minority education rights is a subject for constitutional reform, not negotiation between individual premiers.

And in a strongly worded statement, Blakeney said he is "disturbed and dismayed" at the Quebec proposal, agreeing with Bennett that discussions should be held with the federal government to strengthen minority language education rights.

The two premiers join Hatfield of New Brunswick, Regan of Nova Scotia, Davis of Ontario, and Campbell of Prince Edward Island in opposing Quebec's initiative.

Blakeney's statement sparked a confrontation with Premier Rene Levesque, who later called the Saskatchewan premier's remarks "hasty, distorted and cartoon-like."

Blakeney contended that, under Quebec's proposal, children who come to Quebec from other provinces and whose parents were educated in Ukrainian, German, or any language other than English would not be able to send their children to English schools.

This would be "abhorrent and incompatible with the idea of Canadianism," Blakeney said, because it would create different "classifications" of Canadians.

But Levesque countered that the Saskatchewan premier had a mistaken impression of who would be eligible to attend English schools in Quebec under an eventual reciprocal agreement.

While the premiers were in conference about 20 English-speaking parents from Quebec picketed outside calling for a rejection of any reciprocal language agreements and a guarantee for freedom of choice in the language of instruction.

The demonstrators, from the Quebec Federation of Home and School Associations, chartered a bus for the trip here.

Carrying placards reading "Bill 101 — The Final Solution," they said they were not heard by Quebec national assembly hearings on the legislation and had been refused a meeting with Levesque.

June Ellingsen, a vice-president of the federation, said the group opposes reciprocal agreements between the provinces on minority language education. Access to schools for minorities should be guaranteed in the Canadian constitution, she said.

Meanwhile, Levesque's Quebec delegation released a model reciprocal agreement which defined who could attend English schools in Quebec, if agreements are concluded.

Levesque said this would mean that children already in the English school system in Canada could come to Quebec and continue their studies no matter what the ethnic origin of their parents.

However, several groups of Canadians would be denied English school rights if they moved to Quebec, according to the model agreement.

Margaret Collen looks through hole made by ice 'bomb'

Massive Ice Chunk 'Bombs' Apartment

VANCOUVER (CP) — A big chunk of ice crashed through the roof of a Kitsilano apartment Thursday and left an 18-inch-square hole in the roof. It smashed crockery on the floor and shocked the 22-year-old occupant, Margaret Collen.

However, she was unharmed.

"I was in bed at the time — then I felt plaster fall on my head and got up to find big hunks of ice all over the place," she said. "I didn't believe it was happening at first — if that ice had hit me it would have killed me for sure."

A CP Air spokesman said the ice could have fallen from its DC-8 Flight 61 that was flying into Vancouver from Toronto at the time.

One theory for the falling ice is that there may have been moisture on the fuselage which formed into ice at high altitude, and then broke away as the plane descended into warmer air.

But the CP Air spokesman said ice could not accumulate on the fuselage. "It would have to be a leak from either the toilet or washbasin water systems on board."

Vancouver airport spokesman Alan Jay said the ministry of transport's civil aviation branch has launched an investigation. The probe will likely take two days.

"We can't make any positive statement as to the probable cause, but the incident is grounds for a damage claim," Jay said.

Meanwhile, Miss Collen, a fashion warehouse manager, says she intends to stay in the apartment in the 2400-block West Second despite her traumatic experience.

"I thought it was a burglar who had crashed through the roof at first," she said. "I was lucky because I had just gone to bed — if I had been in the way of the ice, it would have killed me for sure because it must have been travelling at such a high speed to be able to crash through the roof like that."

BAWLF: TWO-WEEK START-UP

$2M Port Complex Eyed for Ogden Point

A multi-million dollar new port facility including a new warehouse, improved cruise ship accommodations and docking for the Black Ball ferry is envisioned in the wake of the Ogden Point fire.

Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf made the prediction Thursday and said the $2 million project could be under way in two weeks.

In addition to a new Westcan pulp and paper warehouse — replacing the one gutted in a spectacular blaze 10 days ago — the project would also at last see demolition of the port's towering and unused grain elevators.

Cruise ships would get improved berthing and construction of a terminal to handle Black Ball service, long earmarked for relocation from the Inner Harbor, is also envisioned.

Bawlf made his announcement following a meeting with a dozen different bodies concerned about the future of the port facility. Among those present were representatives of the federal and provincial governments, the City, Westcan, Black Ball, King Brothers Ltd. (shipping agents for cruise vessels) and the B.C. Development Corp.

The minister said he did not think any extra wharves would have to be built to handle cruise ship traffic, which is on the increase, or the Black Ball ferry.

"Pier B may require some improvements for general purposes," he said, "but otherwise the piers are quite suitable for all needs. What is required is a proper reception facility."

He said the facilities for cruise ships visiting here were "less than palatial ... there's a definite need for improvement."

Bawlf added that the cruise ship business and Black Ball would be compatible in sharing the docking facilities, but stressed that there is still some uncertainty as to whether the ferry will agree to being relocated at Ogden Point.

Bawlf denied that the provincial position at the meeting had been to beautify the site and use it exclusively for cruise ships and the ferry.

He said he is pleased that the warehouse was to be rebuilt and the freight shipping aspect of the port retained.

"We don't want the whole area to be a park," he said. "On the contrary, our main concern was to protect the economic base."

Australia To Fire Strikers

CANBERRA (AP) — The Australian Parliament outlawed strikes by government employees today, setting the stage for a showdown between the conservative government and the unions.

The government labor legislation and the introduction of a tax-cutting national budget two days ago increased expectations that Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser will seek an early national election to be fought on the issue of "Who runs Australia?"

The new labor law authorizes the government to fire public employees who go on strike and to lay off public employees who cannot work because of strikes against either the government or private companies.

Industrial Relations Minister Tony Street said the law will not be enforced "unless circumstances dictate." But it was clearly aimed at a week-long strike by 2,800 postal workers at the country's central mail exchange in Sydney.

The postal strikers are fighting new shift scheduling which they say cuts their overtime pay.

Bob Hawke, president of the Australian Council of Trade Unions, warned the government that "no big industrial dispute has ever been settled through the use of threats or legal sanctions."

Other union leaders said that Fraser, who heads a conservative coalition of the Liberal and National Country parties, is seeking an issue on which to fight an election campaign.

Public-opinion polls show the government's popularity at a low level, partly due to unemployment, which is at an all-time high of 5.3 per cent with 332,783 persons out of work. Industrial production is down; foreign investment has fallen off.

Tentative PO Pact

OTTAWA (CP) — Tentative contract agreement has been reached between the post office and the 15,700-member Letter Carriers' Union of Canada, Postmaster-General Jean-Jacques Blais said today.

In a statement issued by his department, Blais said settlement was reached with the help of mediators.

Details were to be announced later.

U.S. Price Increase Moderate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Consumer prices in the U.S. rose a moderate 0.4 per cent in July — the smallest increase of 1977 — as shoppers enjoyed lower grocery and gasoline costs, the labor department announced today.

The overall monthly increase, reflecting a 4.8 per cent annual inflation rate, appeared to be the start of a cooling trend that economists have been predicting for the last half of 1977.

The July figure compared with large monthly increases averaging 0.7 per cent — or an 8.4 per cent annual rate — during the first half of the year. But economists believe the underlying inflation rate is somewhere between these two extremes at about 6 per cent.

Food costs, the chief source of soaring prices during the first half of the year, have also been responsible for the recent slowdown.

The Latest News Is Late In Parliamentary Library

By PAUL WHITELAW
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Walking into the reading room of the Parliamentary library this week is like stepping into a science fiction "time machine."

Anyone who looks at the racks of "current" newspapers — those received during the last few days — is in for a surprise.

"They'll learn, for instance, that good-old Jerry Ford faces an uphill battle to retain the U.S. presidency against a smiling Georgian peanut farmer called Jimmy Carter.

Ronald Reagan, it is reported on another front page, has just lost out in his bid for the Republican presidential nomination to Ford and is very bitter.

Turning to Canadian news, a visitor to the reading room will learn that the provincial premiers are holding another conference — but not at St. Andrew's, N.B.

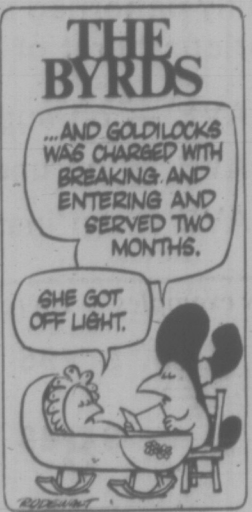

"They're holed up at Banff and they've failed to reach agreement on a formula for patriation of the Canadian constitution."

The time is August 1975 — almost exactly one year ago. At least in the House of Commons and several Ottawa newspaper bureaus.

It may seem like science fiction — but you can blame the Post Office.

Each morning this week, the mail bags arriving on Parliament Hill and at some nearby news bureaus have been bringing year-old newspapers from seven western cities.

Any MP who might have been waiting breathlessly for the last 12 months was finally able Thursday to read the Aug. 12, 1976, Lethbridge

Towaway Tearaway Caper

VANCOUVER (CP) — Bob Barker of Trail was horrified when he saw his car about to be towed away — his wife and two children were asleep inside.

"My wife and kids were within an ace of being kidnapped," the 38-year-old consultant engineer said Thursday. "I had visions of chasing my family down the street."

Barker, on a two-day business trip to Vancouver, was on his way back to Trail when he and his family decided to stay at a motel just southeast of Vancouver.

"It was about 11 p.m. when I pulled up outside the motel's front door," he said. "I was in a no-parking zone and I went in to book rooms."

"My wife was dosing-in the front of the car while my two kids were asleep in the back. When I came back out, I couldn't believe my eyes."

Mrs. Barker said she "was startled by a bang and the next thing I knew the back of the car was being lifted."

"I jumped out and the towtruck driver saw me and leaped out," she said. "He apologized and quickly unhooked the car."

QUARREL ERUPTS ON SHIP

A Panamanian-registered freighter was expected to arrive in Kodiak, Alaska, later today after a harrowing mid-ocean incident that left four crewmen injured, two in custody and required the assistance of the Canadian weather-ship Quadra.

Details of the incident are still sketchy but a spokesman for the United States Coast Guard said this morning a quarrel apparently broke out Wednesday afternoon among the all-Chinese crew of the freighter Primrose, en route to Japan with a full load of logs taken on in Aberdeen, Wash.

The ship was 800 miles west of Vancouver Island and 400 miles south of Kodiak when the master radioed:

"Regret crew serious trouble... with weapons... out of control... please assist."

A U.S. Coast Guard aircraft was sent out to confirm the ship's position but nothing more was heard until four hours later when the captain reported over his radio:

"Two men injured on board... two injured men with guns and knives locked in cabin... request medical attention for injured and evacuation of two prisoners."

The weather-ship Quadra on Station Papa, less than 100 miles away heard the message and went in aid.

The ship arrived at 1 a.m. Thursday and two medical officers went aboard. They examined the injured crewmen but found the injuries not serious and left.

At first, the Primrose captain refused to proceed unless the Quadra escorted his ship into port, but a later coast guard report said the Quadra was back on its station this morning and the freighter was steaming on its own into port.

NEWS BRIEFS

Huge Gem Heist

CAPE TOWN (UPI) — Masked gunmen threw acid in the face of a diamond dealer and stole more than 350,000 tiny diamonds worth up to $4.5 million, police said today. Police sources believed the theft was the largest gem robbery in South African history.

Layoffs Hit 7,300

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Financially troubled Bethlehem Steel Corp. Thursday said it was reducing its steel-making capacity by 10 per cent, laying off 7,300 workers and cutting back its investments plans in order to "improve its profitability."

Attacks Renewed

NAIROBI (UPI) — Somali guerrillas today renewed their attacks near the main Ethiopian stronghold in pressing their offensive to capture all of southeastern Ethiopia's Ogaden region, diplomatic sources said today.

Coffee Tax Cut

BOGOTA (UPI) — The Colombian government cut the tax on coffee exports Thursday, hoping to stimulate sales of Colombian coffee. An official communiqué announced that the tax was lowered by $41.25 per 154 pound sack. It was the third reduction in the tax in six weeks.

$2M Port Eyed

Westcan president Hershey Smith told reporters the proposal envisaged an "immediate" start on reconstruction, with the company using interim financing until it can secure long-term financing from the B.C. Development Corporation or the federal government, or from both sources.

Ultimately the intention is to turn over the ownership and management of the warehouse to whichever agency assumes responsibility for the dock area.

Victoria Aid, Frank Carson, who represented the city's interests at the meeting, said afterwards the Westcan representatives are confident that what revenue will more than cover the cost of servicing the loan debt.

But while they are prepared to take the initiative in rebuilding, it is clear they would "sooner be tenants than landlords" in the long-term picture, he added.

Carson said the federal ministry of transport delegates indicated they would try to obtain an answer within 30 days, on whether the ministry would be prepared to lease the property to the company.

However, Bawlf himself seemed confident that the answer would be yes. After the meeting he speculated that the warehouse project could be under way within two weeks.

Although a number of matters remain to be resolved, including financing for West-can and agreement on lease terms, the minister said he is "assured that we will have speedy reconstruction. I expect reconstruction of the warehouse before winter."

Fishboat Hunted

United States and Canadian Coast Guard vessels and aircraft searched the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait today for a fishboat that was reported sinking Thursday night.

A U.S. Coast Guard spokesman said a distress message was received at 10:15 p.m. from a fishboat identified as the Karma II. The caller said the boat was taking on water and there were four persons on board.

Jobless Welfare Cut Off

"In emergency situations," he said, "the welfare ministry can decide whether to provide money or foodstuffs, depending on the specific requirements for each individual case."

Other cabinet-approved amendments to GAIN include changes that will stop welfare recipients from remortgaging their homes in order to collect additional benefits, and that will relax restrictions on welfare recipients who are waiting an increase in assistance rates.

"We have encountered a number of abuses where persons remortgage their homes to pay off bills, take a holiday, purchase new cars and what have you and then turn around and collect additional coverage benefits from the ministry to cover the increased mortgage payments," said Vander Zalm.

Stutts said the number of people abusing the welfare program through remortgaging their homes is small.

Regarding rate structure changes, the minister said recipients who begin assistance at one rate and are due for an increase after four months will not have to restart the four-month waiting period if they find a casual or temporary job.

VGH Jobs Analysed

By MIKE HUGHES
Times Staff

Victoria General will be the first hospital examined as part of a mammoth job evaluation program for B.C. hospitals.

The purpose of the program, which is expected to take more than two years to complete, is to put an end to discrimination on the basis of sex in job descriptions and pay rates as well as standardize job classifications.

The complexity of the problem arises from the fact that there are 105 hospitals to be evaluated and about 150 standard occupational classifications.

Victoria General, which has about 600 employees working in 50 to 60 jobs, is part of a three-hospital pilot evaluation program. The other two hospitals to be examined are Royal Columbian, in New Westminster, and Lona Gate in North Vancouver.

The evaluation program is part of an agreement worked out in August, 1970, between the Hospital Employees Union and the provincial health department under the former NDP administration.

However, because of the costs involved nothing was done about it until Kelowna Lawyer Hugh Ladner was appointed to arbitrate differences of opinion on the matter as part of a two-year agreement imposed by the legislature in June, 1970.

Ladner handed down his report earlier this year and a three-member implementation committee has been appointed, including chairman Hugh Wilkinson, industrial consultant and sessional lecturer in the University of Victoria's school of public administration.

Bill Rolfe was appointed as the representative of the Health Labor Relations Association on the committee and the union assigned Ray McCready to represent their interests.

Optimists hope the evaluation job at the three hospitals can be completed and the new rates and classifications in place by the end of the year or early next year. The job begins Monday at VGH.

The committee has set December, 1973, as an optimistic deadline for completion of all hospitals in the province.

As a result of the evaluation program, some wage rates will go up retroactive to Jan. 1, 1974.

However, this will be balanced off somewhat by jobs which get a lower rating, resulting, in some cases, in a temporary wage freeze.

Margaret Trudeau, with Michel and Justin

Trudeaus United Again?

WEST VANCOUVER (CP) — Margaret Trudeau said Thursday she is very optimistic about a complete reconciliation with her husband.

"It's what we've always wanted," the prime minister's wife said during an interview at her parents' home. "We've been working in this direction and I am praying it will now work out again."

"I am very happy," she said. "But I'm not setting any time limit."

Mrs. Trudeau is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Sinclair, along with five-year-old Justin and Michel, who is almost two, while the prime minister vacations in Klusane National park in the Yukon, with three-year-old Sacha.

She said she will meet her husband when he arrives Sunday in Vancouver and will fly with him and the children to Ottawa.

"We will be staying together in Ottawa for a while as father and mother — not husband and wife at the moment," she said. "We are a family."

She said she wants to continue her photographic career and hopes to get a contract with a North American television station.

Trudeau was also questioned about the reconciliation reports when he arrived at Whitehorse Wednesday, but refused to comment.

"He seemed taken aback by the question," said Whitehorse Star editor Max Fraser. "He had a strong emotional reaction to it."

Trudeau is scheduled to fly the 230-mile route of the Dempster Highway between Dawson City, Y.T., and Inuvik, N.W.T., and visit Old Crow, Y.T., on Saturday before returning to Ottawa Sunday.

Justice Agency Urges Son of Sam Release

NEW YORK (AP) — A pre-trial agency recommended that David Berkowitz, who police say is the Son of Sam killer of six persons, be released without bail because he had a steady job, a permanent residence and no prior criminal record.

The recommendation by the Criminal Justice Agency Inc., a private group funded by the city and the federal government, "defies belief," Mayor Abraham Beame said Thursday.

The agency recommended Berkowitz's release on his own recognizance although it knew he was accused of being the 44-calibre killer, Beame said.

The mayor said similar recommendations in less-notorious cases "could permit dangerous criminals to walk the streets on little or no bail."

At a news conference, Beame, running for re-election, also repeated his contention that "we must crack down on loopholes in the criminal-justice system."

He ordered an immediate investigation of the procedures used by the agency, which interviews every criminal justice defendant who appears before a judge in New York City and makes its recommendations to judges.

Beame said the recommendation was based on information supplied by the 24-year-old Berkowitz, a postal worker.

The agency makes only one of two decisions: release without bail or no recommendation. In practice, judges in the city usually order murder defendants held without bail initially.

Beame said he was informed of the recommendation by the agency's board chairman, Nicholas Scopetta, deputy mayor for criminal justice. Scopetta said it was the "apparently absurd result of a mechanical and literal interpretation by the agency of its criteria for recommending bail."

Meanwhile, The Daily News says psychiatrists examining Berkowitz have serious doubts that he will be found mentally competent to stand trial.

Range Fires Scar Idaho

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Governor John Evans of Idaho declared an emergency late Thursday as northern Idaho range fires moved into heavy, almost inaccessible timber.

The state land board held an emergency session earlier Thursday and approved transfer of $200,000 from the governor's emergency fund to battle the blaze.

State forester Jack Gillette said it will cost the state at least $500,000 to fight one fire on the Clearwater River, 12 miles east of Kootenai. That blaze covered 600 acres and was spreading rapidly toward prime timber.

"Our problem is that this is an expensive type of fire to fight," said Gillette. "It is along a steep south slope and is burning timber and brush."

Predictable

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A $225,000 study of futuristic transportation problems predicting, among other things, that Ice Age Americans would move south, won Sen. William Proxmire's Golden Fleece of the Month award today.

Proxmire called the findings by the U.S. transportation department "perhaps the most speculative, impractical and redundant study ever paid for by the government."

Hot Weather Killing Salmon

VANCOUVER (CP) — Abnormal water temperatures in the Fraser River are believed responsible for the death of hundreds of salmon in the past week, federal fisheries spokesman L. S. Freeman said Thursday.

Freeman also said that some fish have net marks which suggest they might have been dumped back in the river when fisheries control officers were investigating illegal fishing practices.

"We are still investigating and haven't come to any firm decision but high water temperatures appear to be the prime suspect," he said.

Air temperature in the Fraser Canyon has been in the high 30s during the past week with night lows above 25. As a result water temperatures have risen to 18 degrees which is about the critical point for spawning fish, he said.

"These fish have spent their lives in the ocean and are accustomed to temperatures about 10 degrees and the sudden rise is too much for them," Freeman said, adding he does not recall a similar situation on the Fraser, but said this type of mortality is not uncommon on smaller feeder streams that heat up more quickly.

Freeman would not estimate the number of dead fish, but another source said there could be as many as 1,000. There are no figures on the number of fish that have net marks.

"One of our men picked up six fish and two of them had net marks," Freeman said. "These could be poached fish or they might be fish caught by the Indians that had started to go bad and were thrown away."

"But we are inclined to blame the weather and the situation could get a lot worse if the hot weather continues."

Prostitution Epidemic, Says Chief

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver police chief Don Winterton Thursday announced a crackdown on juvenile prostitution, but added that police need assistance from legislators to be effective.

Winterton said prostitution, both female and male juvenile, was growing at an epidemic rate, but police efforts to curtail it are hampered by the limitations of existing legislation.

"I shall do everything in my power to have that legislation changed so that we can effectively rid the streets of both female and juvenile male (prostitutes)," he said.

Slowing a Council Down

It appears the provincial highways ministry has been able to do what seven ratepayers' groups could not — get Saanich council to slow down in its hell-bent-for-leather pursuit of the elusive developer's dollar. The ministry's request that the municipality prepare now for a major new east-west road through northern Saanich has brought council to a rough, grinding halt on several of its major proposals, including plans for an industrial park in the Royal Oak area and housing developments in the rural area of North Quadra.

Council is well aware that it will have to decide whether to agree to the provincial request and if so, how to go about it, before it can proceed with planning for the other projects. There simply is no point in zoning an area for single-family dwellings if a highway is about to be pushed through it nor to working out traffic routes for an industrial park if a whole new route is going to open up at about the same time the park is.

If the highways ministry has sprung the road proposal on council the way council complains it has, then its methods should be criticized. But the end result can only be praised.

Mayor Ed Lum spouted a lot of nonsense earlier this week after the seven ratepayers' groups got together to complain about the lack of information forthcoming from council and to ask for a 90-day moratorium on the four largest projects — two of which are the industrial park and the North Quadra rezoning.

The mayor said, for example, that the moratorium couldn't be imposed because there were no "formal applications" before council. No formal applications, Mr. Mayor, only a community plan setting up areas for industrial and commercial development and a special rezoning bylaw for the North Quadra area. As the mayor knows perfectly well, the passage of that plan and that zoning bylaw would make it 100 times easier for developers to get the green light for the major developments contemplated. Therefore, the moratorium was a perfectly reasonable request.

Lum also disagreed with the ratepayers' complaints that their groups had not been given information. However, the ratepayers can cite examples of innumerable secret reports and documents they've been unable to see; besides, anyone who has had anything to do with Saanich council in the past five years knows it's easier to get chicken eggs out of a duck than it is to get information out of that municipal hall.

Saanich council's problem is that it's had everything its own way for far too long. While Oak Bay and Victoria residents years ago learned how to organize themselves to oppose council plans they didn't like, Saanich residents have never seemed to pay any attention to their council from one election day to the next. What ratepayers' groups existed were loosely-organized, widely-separated and largely ineffectual.

Having to deal with organized, sustained opposition is new to the aldermen — and undoubtedly good for both them and the system itself.

Lum and his council would have been wise to agree to the idea of a 90-day freeze on the community plan and major projects. They didn't, but they now should be sensible enough to use the delay the highways ministry has provided to provide the sorts of information and the dialogue the ratepayers want and are entitled to have.

... go ahead, name one ... out of all the people we wished Happy New Year back in January, name ONE who has had a happy new year so far ... just one ...

Club Racket

The racket at the Racquet Club is ridiculous. Last night (Aug. 10) those drunk men — attempting to play tennis at 1:30 a.m. — make me wonder if they have any rules over there at all. I would think that there is a certain time that is reasonable to close up "shop" for the night. If patrons feel like getting drunk and yelling at each other, why not go inside and bellow your lungs out? Some of their neighbors have to sleep at night. I wish I could stay awake all night and not have to go to work the next day.

Last Saturday's dance was another wild fiasco. Have fun but at 2 a.m. please stop yelling over the megaphone. It isn't bad enough to have a band blasting out music at that late hour, but when they have to start calling for last drinks and start yelling about "immature girls" over the megaphone, then it leads me to believe that they should have stopped drinking some time ago, packed it in and gone home.

When they have another dance, perhaps they will be kind enough to send invitations to all the people within two miles radius. Then we'll all come over and help make noise; we won't try sleeping. Also, they should think about building a roof over the tennis courts, then they could get screamed out and play tennis day and night.

Next year, when the club is crying about taxes I'll be right there insisting that they pay every last cent without any special consideration. They aren't being very considerate of others, it's evident. Two noisy nights out of three! Somebody's got to give. Consider it: could they operate within a reasonable time schedule? One to 2 a.m. is not a reasonable time to be out screaming, trying to play tennis, nor is it time to have megaphone blasting away. Next time, I promise to walk over and put a few tennis balls into the megaphone — anything to get some quiet! — Joan Kurth, 217-170 McKenzie Avenue.

City Council

Full marks to Barbara McLintock for her excellent portrayal of civic government in Victoria! (Victoria City Council: Good Men, Bad System, Saturday, August 13).

Her thoughtful article clearly exposed some of the basic inadequacies of our municipal approach to government in the city of Victoria. For a number of years concerned citizens have attempted to encourage city council to open up its debate of issues to the people of Victoria. To this point their efforts have fallen largely upon deaf ears. As the article indicates there is a definite lack of opportunity for the general public to be part of the democratic process at the council level. Issues are debated in closed committee sessions. Thursday afternoon public council meetings merely ratify motions that have been debated and agreed upon on those committee meetings. A fundamental component of the democratic system is, however, the right of citizens to hear opposing viewpoints. This we are not permitted.

I have however a couple of remarks to make about the article. Barbara McLintock states that our city council "seems to be a group of sincere and dedicated persons." On the whole I would agree. There are one or two aldermen I have a high regard for, in particular John Hayes and Bill Tindall. Yet I would disagree with the article's conclusion that it is the system alone that is at fault. A system can be changed by those responsible for its orderly running. Yet I have not seen any sign of our present city council trying to improve the inadequate system. This leads me to believe that the aldermen are basically satisfied with current procedures. Why no changes from our council? Perhaps they fear public scrutiny of public affairs and debate? — Robin Blencoe, 1157 Princess Avenue.

Bank Praised

Concerning the letter Inflexible (Times, Aug. 12), I have noticed what has seemed to be a last minute effort to get loads of publicity to save the old Jones building. Certainly this newspaper has given good coverage and large photos to bring attention to the Hallmark Society's efforts and rightfully so.

However, and because of this publicity, I would like to comment thusly:

(1) The banks stand has at no time appeared "inflexible."

(2) As far as approachability and desire to look after the needs of people, I suggest one look at the admirable work that this same bank is doing with their community bank in the east end of downtown Vancouver.

(3) Everyone agrees on the importance of proper protection of heritage structures; and this can be seen not only by action groups such as the Hallmark Society, but by both our civic and provincial governments.

(4) Why can't the Yorkshire Trust building, which does have some lovely architectural value, remain, and in fact become a jewel between the two new structures?

(5) The Jones building, as the former Campbell building, were good practical office blocks; but their time and value has come and passed.

I for one look forward to the contribution of the Royal bank to this valuable Fort Street corner. And thank them for their interest in our city and well being. — Henry L. J. Landry, Box 112, Station E, Victoria.

Service and Dependability

Postmaster-General Jean-Jacques Blais gave a speech earlier this week about the possible demise of the post office unless good labor relations can be restored. There is no argument with Blais' priorities — management-union bickering threatens to submerge the post office in a sea of inefficiency and red ink.

Those who would blame the unions, particularly the militant Canadian Union of Postal Workers, for all the problems that plague the movement of Canadian mail, got no comfort from the postmaster-general. He acknowledged frankly that the policy makers are to blame as well. The post office has stood still while private couriers and communications firms offered all sorts of new and better means for getting messages across the country.

The unions are partly responsible, but then no one in Ottawa has really taken seriously the problems of the post office. There's a revolving door in the office of postmaster-general. New appointees have barely time enough to comprehend some of the issues when they are rotated to some more satisfying and politically profitable cabinet position. It seems the only way the prime minister can get someone to fill the job is to promise that he won't be there for more than a year or so.

Blais noted that total mail volume handled by the post office is about a billion pieces short of its forecasts and parcel volume is at 1957 levels. The explanation is not hard to find.

Shutdowns have made people wary of entrusting their communications to the post office, and rapid postage increases have deterred others. The post office is still a reliable carrier of first class mail but it has fallen down badly in delivering periodicals. Weekly magazines or newspapers may arrive three or four on one day, as if the post office saved them up deliberately. Delays like this are intolerable to a subscriber who wants his weekly once a week, not all at the end of the month.

The postal code system is a great idea, but it's taking years to implement. The longer it exists only half-finished and the presence or absence of the six-character code on the bottom of your envelope makes no difference at all as to how fast it's delivered, none but the conscientious are going to use it.

Part of the post office's problem seems to be that it has gone into new systems and made promises that it couldn't keep. So it was with guaranteed next-day delivery of first class mail. It can't even do that with special delivery sometimes.

The success of private couriers and delivery companies — which charge much more than the post office — shows that people and businesses are willing to pay for dependable service. If they know their messages will get to their destination tomorrow, if they know for certain that the company will be in business tomorrow and the next day and next year and not be shut down for a capricious study session or walkout, then people will use whatever service is available.

Canada's government post office lost business because it was not all of these. It can make a start towards regaining this business by slowly building up a reputation for service and dependability.

PETER HADEKEL

Only Small Battles Left

QUEBEC CITY — It is not likely that the summer of 1977 will be remembered with fondness by opposition members of the Quebec national assembly.

After more than four months of debate on Quebec's charter of the French language, much of it in stifling summer heat which caused tempers to boil over, the opposition has little to show for its efforts.

The language charter will become law in a matter of days, in time for the start of the school year, but few of the amendments proposed by the opposition will be retained in its final form. The Liberals alone had 80 amendments to propose to the language bill, but saw only a couple of them enacted.

The government has shown flexibility in some areas but has not altered the philosophy and goals of its bill.

Minority Rights

Its offer to negotiate minority language education rights with the other provinces met with all party approval and a clause allowing such agreements was inserted in the bill. As it now reads, the legislation would force all newcomers to Quebec to enroll their children in French schools unless they come from provinces which sign reciprocal agreements with Quebec guaranteeing access to French schools.

Bowing to strong opposition pressure, the government also amended the education section of the bill to exempt children with learning disabilities. The opposition had argued learning a new language would be an unnecessary hardship for handicapped children.

After a meeting with English hospital administrators, the government agreed to ease its "francization" requirements on hospitals and clinics. The change would place health institutions in the same category as municipalities and school boards.

Previously, hospitals had been grouped together with businesses and were subject to strict francization guidelines. Representatives of 22 English-language health institutions in Montreal warned Laurin that the quality of health care would suffer if they had to operate in French.

Under the amendment, hospitals will be able to use English in their internal communications if the majority of their patients are English-speaking. But they must conform to general francization guidelines by 1983.

Another change would allow English-speaking judges an extra two years to comply with an article of the bill ordering all court judgments in French.

The opposition had argued the article would create major problems in the courts because of the number of English-speaking judges and a lack of translation facilities.

Faced with the spectre of civil disobedience and illegal enrolments in Montreal schools this fall, the government eased its regulations of English school registrations.

Previously, it had been asking school boards to register English-speaking students by September 1, a task that involved obtaining the school records of parents to verify whether one parent had received elementary education in English as required by the legislation.

Not only did the school boards argue that the Sept. 1 deadline was impossible to meet, they also balked at following regulations for a bill that had not yet become law.

Under the new regulations, parents will have an extra 30 days to submit their school records to the boards. And in the interim, their children can attend English schools until a decision is made on their eligibility.

The former regulations would have forced children to attend French schools while waiting for a ruling on their eligibility for the English sector. However, the new rules raise the possibility the government may have to force some ineligible students out of English schools at the end of September, risking an emotional confrontation with the parents concerned.

Some of the amendments to Bill 101 introduced last week seem designed to provoke the English and immigrant communities in Quebec, according to Liberal MNA John Ciacia.

The member for Mount Royal, who has been his party's most effective performer in the language debate, is particularly incensed at a provision which would force all employers to advertise job opportunities in the French-language newspapers.

"It's going to kill the English papers," he said, arguing that the high cost of advertising would not permit businessmen the luxury of buying ads in both a French and an English daily.

Ethnics Hurt

Ciacia says the provision seems to infringe on freedom of the press and may contravene Quebec's charter of human rights and freedoms. "We'll need an army of bureaucrats to administer these regulations," he adds.

Another amendment, which would force small businesses to erect unilingual French signs if they open after the law is passed, is "discriminatory," says Ciacia.

The clause, which applies to businesses with four employees or less, hits hard at Montreal's ethnic communities, who have told the government they want to preserve the ethnic character of their stores.

The law would create two classes of immigrants, complains Ciacia. Those who already operate a store would be allowed to have another language on their signs, but now store owners must use exclusively French signs.

Opposition members have been reduced to fighting clauses like this one, having long since lost the larger battle of preventing a coercive language law that takes away rights from Quebec minorities.

Fire Thanks

This is to express publicly my appreciation of the many kindnesses extended toward our officers and firefighters on the evening of the fire emergency at Ogden Point.

I speak of such instances as the owners of the Beacon drive-in bringing large quantities of coffee and sandwiches to the fire scene from midnight until 2:30 a.m.; also, the owners of a pleasure boat docked near the B.C. Packers who supplied a 10-gallon container of soup and sandwiches.

In conclusion, I also thank the many civilians who assisted the department in laying hose lines and in general assisting us setting up our apparatus. — Eric Simmons, Victoria Fire Chief.

Disruptive Union

The National Citizens' Coalition, on behalf of its more than 25,000 members across Canada, has been looking into the Canada post office labor problems for over two years. We have reviewed the fire labor union strikes that have occurred since 1970 and the various published statements by the union. We have reached the conclusion that the CUPW representing the inside workers are motivated by self-serving objectives which are clearly against the interests of the majority of Canadians.

The request of this union for a royal commission inquiry into the post office is an unjustified tactic which would be another serious waste of taxpayers' money. The post office has undertaken a massive program to improve productivity and hold down the cost of mail distribution. Despite guarantees that steps of modernization will not mean loss of jobs, post office efforts have been systematically subverted and even sabotaged by the filing of thousands of grievances, which demonstrates that the union has not bargained in good faith.

In the face of this continual unwillingness to assist in this necessary program of upgrading of essential facilities and services, it is now clear that parliament must take immediate steps to decertify the CUPW to avoid further millions of dollars of losses to Canadian citizens and businesses.

Davidson stated recently: "Our energies are not being used to create conflict, but rather to defend our union and its members from an employer whose blatant refusal to observe our collective agreement has given rise to over 10,000 grievances." This union executive has now resorted to the technique of the "big lie," thus misleading the public and their own

Bloodbath, Brainwash

By RICHARD CARLETON

EAST TIMOR — "I saw at least 150 people lined up on the wharf and shot. As each shot was fired, a body fell into the water and they all eventually floated out to sea."

The gruesome account was given to me recently by an eye-witness of the 1975 Indonesian invasion of the former Portuguese colony of East Timor.

I met the man secretly when the Indonesians allowed me to be the first independent journalist to travel in Timor since their invasion. If I were to mention his name here there can be no doubt that he would be thrown out of Timor tomorrow. Our meeting was clandestine and both he and I were conscious of the consequences if we were caught talking so frankly.

Rape, Looting

It was the first wave of Indonesian marines and paratroopers that was responsible for most of the killing, looting and rape at Dili, the Timorese capital.

The victims were the Chinese traders and the Timorese peasants who had either stayed to fight the Indonesians or had judged the invaders to be less ruthless.

Tiny East Timor is a half island 500 miles off the north coast of Australia in the middle of the Indonesian archipelago. For 450 years it was a Portuguese colony. The other half of the island belonged to the Dutch until it became part of independent Indonesia in 1949.

As in Angola, Portugal's legacy was a civil war. Little is known about it and the subsequent Indonesian invasion. One reason is that Australia and Indonesia successfully conspired to prevent correspondents covering them. Journalists who tried to reach the island from Australia were prevented from chartering planes and boats were stopped. Now, two years later, the best one can do is to gather the odd eyewitness account from those not too terrified to talk.

Indonesia invaded Timor not because it wanted more territory but because it feared that an independent Timor might turn Communist some time in the future.

Indonesia used much the same technique to take over Timor as it had used in annexing the former Dutch colony of West New Guinea (Irian Jaya).

It moved in, set up a puppet assembly and then magnanimously agreed when the assembly sought integration with Indonesia. The "integration" of Timor is on the agenda for the United Nations General Assembly meeting in September.

Despite the efforts of pockets of left-wing Fretilin guerrillas in the mountains of Timor, Indonesia does exercise effective control now. An occupying army of 15,000 ensures that, but it still faces problems. The helicopters supplied to transport me were under instructions to fly above 3,000 feet, beyond the range of small arms fire. That the pilot did not always follow instructions was evident from the three bullet holes in the fuselage.

Everywhere the Indonesians took me they had three guards always within earshot and two concentric circles of "civil defence" troops surrounding me. They claimed that this was not to restrict my movements but rather to protect me.

According to their version of events, the killing of five Western journalists during the fighting in October 1975 was a propaganda boost for the Fretilin guerrillas by attracting attention from the Western media (though pro-Indonesian forces were reportedly responsible). The Fretilin radio had mentioned I was in Timor and the fear was that the guerrillas would do anything to get their story back into the newspapers.

The one centre to which I specifically asked the Indonesians to take me was Balibo, the tiny settlement on the East Timor-West Timor border where the journalists were killed. For my television cameras I tried to re-create the events surrounding their deaths. Apparently my presentation was too graphic for the authorities. We were flown out with the excuse that the blue skies looked threatening.

Nobody can be really sure how many Timorese died during the civil war and the invasion. The Indonesians admit to 10,000. Others have claimed the figure is 100,000. From the estimates I was given, 50,000 may be nearer the mark.

The population of Timor was 670,000. If 50,000 is anywhere near right, about seven per cent of the population died to make the Timor decolonization process the bloodiest, on a per capita basis, the modern world has witnessed.

Orwellian

The Indonesians were not the only culprits. After 450 years of colonial rule the Portuguese left behind one university graduate, one dentist, one high school and one (unstaffed) hospital. They also left a territory rife with tuberculosis, virulent malaria, encephalitis and yaws — all by-products of poor nutrition and hygiene.

Indonesia is now engaged in a full-scale Orwellian re-education of the Timorese. In Dili, children were paraded before me to sing propaganda songs about the chain of islands from the east to the west being one nation, one people, one Indonesia.

And, despite the brutality of the annexation, Timor may be better off in the long term within Indonesia for the territory is economically non-viable and dependent on aid to survive.

Sketch of proposed plant beside Niger river (top right)

Solar Power For Africa

By DANIEL BEHRMAN

The world's biggest solar power plant will start up next year at Dire, a town on the banks of the Niger River in Mali, 120 miles south of Timbuktu.

Its capacity will be 80,000 watts, hardly a flicker compared to the thousands of megawatts (that is thousands of millions of watts) in the plants using coal, oil or uranium. But it will be far greater than anything ever before run by the sun.

The solar power station will carry out four tasks. It will pump 300,000 cubic feet of water up 25 feet every day from the Niger to irrigate 37 acres of land.

From a well 60 feet deep, it will pump another 21,200 cubic feet daily to supply drinking water for up to 10,000 persons in Dire.

Then it will refrigerate a cold room for an agricultural co-operative and generate five kilowatts of electrical power to light the co-operative and a 40-room tourist hotel after sundown.

The cost of the plant, an estimated $1 million, is being financed by the French government under a program known as New Energy for the Sahel.

It is being built at Amilly, a village outside Montargis, 75 miles southeast of Paris, by a small firm whose trademark is a cogwheel driven by a toothed sun. Renault, the French nationalized automobile manufacturer, recently acquired an interest in the company which is headed by Jean-Pierre Girardier. Other partners in the venture are the French Atomic Energy Commission and CFF, the French Petroleum Company.

The story of the solar power plant parallels the life of Girardier, who is now 43. In 1960, he was teaching physics at the University of Dakar in Senegal. There he met Henri Masson who was dean of the science faculty until his death in 1972. It was Masson who gave Girardier the idea of running an engine on the difference in temperature between the hot African sun overhead and the cold water under the ground.

In 1963, they built their first working model and it pumped 6,820 gallons an hour. Two years later, a solar engine with five times the capacity was set up in Dakar where it ran non-stop for a year. That was about as far as they got and Girardier went back to making irrigation and sewage pumps in his family-owned factory.

In 1973, interest was whetted anew in solar engines. Not only had the price of oil gone up, but the cost of fueling and servicing a diesel-driven pump in remote Saharan outposts was rising even faster. Girardier began to install small pumps, about a kilowatt in capacity, in Mauritania, Niger, Mali and Upper Volta.

Girardier has gradually scaled up his plants while keeping the same basic design. Since his engines run at a low temperature, they are inefficient and require a vast area of solar collectors. Girardier and two architects, Mr. and Mrs. Georges Alexandroff, have turned this liability into an asset. They use the collectors as roofing for schools or markets or other buildings.

At Dire, there will be nearly an acre of collectors. Five will roof the hotel and the farm co-operative; 12 others, looking something like low greenhouses, will rest on the ground. Under their glass, they will be warming water, not plants. Four hundred cubic metres of water will be stored below the collectors in basins scooped from the earth and lined with plastic. They are Girardier's heat bank, enabling him to run his engine and generate electricity at night with the heat of the afternoon sun. Water heated to 70 or 80 degrees C. during the day will provide power for ten hours at night.

"People will believe in solar energy only if we can supply electricity at night," Girardier has said. "Hot water is the easiest way to store energy and also the easiest way to get it out of storage and I always believe in doing things the simplest way."

Girardier's engines are meant for remote places and it would be hard to imagine a more out-of-the-way spot than Dire. It is accessible only four months a year and only by boat along the Niger. The rest of the time, the river is too low and there are no roads. Girardier will ship his plant to Abidjan, capital of the Ivory Coast, and then truck it to Mopti on the Niger for the last stage by riverboat.

He does not want to become too big. He likes to remark that his factory, which only uses 150 kilowatts of power, could be run in Mali by the sunshine that would fall on its roof. He thinks the market for his solar engines lies at present in remote communities with populations of no more than 10,000. Bigger towns usually are on a road network and fuel can be trucked in to run diesel-driven generators and pumps.

The solar engines can bring the production of electricity down to the scale of a small business, eliminating the overhead costs that add so much to the price of power in centralized systems. In Senegal, a local company has been set up to operate solar pumping stations.

Most attempts to use solar energy to run an engine rely on mirrors to focus the sun's rays onto a high-temperature steam boiler. Girardier maintains that, because of wind and sand, this cannot be done in desert or near-desert conditions. "In the Sahara, if you put a mirror out in the morning you won't be able to see your face in it by the afternoon."

Instead, he uses flat collectors that need not be moved to follow the sun. They heat water to only 80 degrees C. or less. This heat is transferred to a gas such as butane, expanding it to drive an engine pumping up water from underground. The cold water then condenses the butane gas back into a liquid where it is ready to be heated and put to work again.

He sees prospects for his machines outside the hot dry countries. Geothermal heat in Europe could supply the temperature difference they require. Or they could use solar heat in the Arctic.

In the Arctic? "Yes, you could use water under the ice at 4 degrees C. as the warm side of a heat engine, and the air above the ice at 30 or 40 degrees below zero as the cold side."

The Medium And Message

By DENNIS BRAITHWAITE

Toronto Star

The art of corporate public relations reaches a new level of subtlety in the current issue of The Review, a beautifully designed and printed 32-page magazine whose contents have the distinction of being totally Canadian — in origin, if not in inspiration.

The cover, a well-executed, full-color impressionistic tribute to Canadian authors, illustrates an article inside the magazine about Canadian literature by critic William French. Peter Desbarats has a long piece on the country's heritage of historic buildings, accompanied by exceptionally fine photographs, many of them in color.

Ubiquitous Harry Boyle is represented by a nostalgic article about his father, a small-town general storekeeper in the '30s. The Review's editor, Kenneth Bagnall, contributes a warm and loving tribute to E. B. White, occasioned by publication of the author's collected letters.

Indeed, if you aren't curious enough to poke around looking for The Review's masthead, you might suppose the magazine to be a rather high-class general interest periodical. The masthead, when you do locate it, on the back cover, printed in very small type, mentions that The Review is published by Imperial Oil Ltd.

Strong Case

This multinational proprietorship gives point to two other articles in the magazine, two out of five. One, by Wynne Thomas, is all about oil and gas pipelines and its gist is that they are a good thing. I am not here arguing that point, but noting that the author, in this oil company publication, makes out a pretty strong case for that industry's principle current preoccupation.

"Canada's pipeline industry claims that it is the nation's safest mode of transportation," Thomas writes at one point, "and statistics make that claim hard to refute."

And later: "Moving natural gas from the Arctic by pipeline would represent a significant technological triumph for Canadian engineers. But in another sense it would be merely a logical step in the development of a mode of transportation that has served this country for more than a century."

The second article, by James

Hickman, is titled A New Deal For Dealers and gives a more or less glowing account of the proliferation of self-serve gas stations that all the big oil companies are now building and that are strongly opposed by the retail gas dealers.

Hickman acknowledges the dealers' case against self-serve gas bars, admitting that "some dealers have gone out of business and others are having a tough time," but concludes that their distress is temporary. "The dealers' plight is real, but in the long haul the ones who remain will be better off. They will have a solid business with large incomes." That's like telling the unemployed not to worry because their employed brothers are doing all right.

Plain Fact?

Hickman also repeats the oil companies' line that gas-bars came into being because of public demand, the theory being that gas is cheaper at the bars than at regular stations and motorists don't mind pumping their own to save a few pennies. "The oil companies can no more make customers go back to their old ways than they can unboil an egg," Hickman writes. "The plain fact is that the old ways of selling gasoline, which developed over a period of about 50 years, no longer meet present consumer demands."

That's not the way the Automotive Retailers Association sees it. It is their contention that once all or most of the stations have been replaced by gas-bars, the price will sneak back up to where it was. Considering that the oil companies, not the dealers, control the price, the argument is persuasive. And do motorists really want to pump their own?

It turns out, then, that The Review, beneath its high gloss and its ostensible dedication to exploring the Canadian experience through the works of some of our best known journalists, has an equal if not greater interest in promoting the cause of Imperial Oil and the industry of which it is a major element.

This is its right, of course, but I think that in all honesty, it should revert to its former title (as I recall it), The Imperial Oil Review, and carry a banner line on the cover to the effect that the publication is dedicated to the prosperity and further growth of the multinational oil industry.

The Vegetarian Option

Senator John Melcher, from a state with more cows than people, roused some of the latter recently when word drifted back to Montana that he had forewarned dining on those cows. But the word was wrong. A Washington magazine mis-reported that Senator Melcher was a vegetarian. That was close enough, at least typographically. The senator is a veterinarian.

***

A Los Angeles newspaper picked up the vegetarian story, and soon the breezes blew it north and west into astonished ears from Missoula to Billings. Dr. Melcher began hearing from ranchers and cattlemen, who didn't put him in office to go East to sup on pita bread and celery stalks. Stay calm, Dr. Melcher reassured the he-men down at the corral, it's just another media foul-up. Remembering what happened to Fred Harris of Oklahoma when he apostatized from the true faith of oil, Senator Melcher quickly sent out pictures of himself happily ravishing one of Montana's juiciest cows.

That would appear to end the matter, with the senator's career safe and his palate savoring the 160 pounds of beef that is the per capita consumption in America.

But a case can be made that Dr. Melcher panicked too soon, as freshmen senators tend to do. With a little reflection, a strategy was available that would not only have enhanced his career but also lived his stay in Washington, as dull as it must be for a man used to roaming the range healing creatures great and small.

The enhancement would have been sure to come had Dr. Melcher really gone vegetarian—for, say, a year. Then, shedding the tears of the prodigal, not to mention speaking in the new tongues of the born-again, he could have announced that he had gone back to eating meat. Voters warm to one of the fallen who rises again. A few years ago, an eastern senator bolstered his campaign by announcing that he was a recovered alcoholic. He went on to trounce his opponent, being perceived by the voters not as an ex-lush but as a strong-willed battler whom the state needed to bring sobriety to Washington.

By COLMAN MCCARTHY

Dr. Melcher, a senator for less than a year, could have afforded to take the risk of vegetarianism for a brief spell. The next time in the polls, Montanans would have remembered less his lapse than his recovery.

By then, Dr. Melcher would also be a best-selling author, his outside income as a veterinarian made irrelevant by royalties from Doctor Melcher's Congressional Meat Diet. Doctor, that magic word, as Drs. Atkins, Reuben, Solomon and Stillman know, assures success in dietology. Senator Melcher's main risk in all this would have been not with the voters but with the pleasures of the vegetarian way. What if he discovered, as have countless others, that vegetables, fruits and grains make a diet that is healthy, economical and ethical?

The second enhancement would have been to the senator's ego. During his year as a vegetarian, Dr. Melcher would have been the darling of Washington's hostesses. Of late, darlings are hard to come by, now that the Georgians have learned that grits are better used for caulking the water pipes than eating. Having a vegetarian to dinner is one of the few challenges left for the hostess who has seen them all. Vegetarians used to go to Washington dinners and say nothing about their cautious ways. Adopting the manner of St. Francis among the publicans, they would eat what was served but not ask for seconds. But a few pathfinding vegetarians began calling ahead, asking the hostesses to put aside a little broccoli, squash and wheat germ and that would be plenty.

Now when a vegetarian calls ahead, he is likely to be told not to worry, that only last week Andy Jacobs came to dinner and things went well. Mr. Jacobs is the Indianapolis congressman who is a passionate vegetarian, with neither his career, much less his health, suffering. The message is clear: anyone can cook for the meat-eater, but only the imaginative and brave hostess can satisfy an Andy Jacobs.

But where can more Andys be found if even a senator with re-election five years away grows nervous at the sound of lettuce crunching in his own mouth?

Vegetarians are lionized at dinner parties not because hostesses can reveal their kitchen nimbleness but because no better time exists to theorize about food than when eating it. Ordinary clods who are vegetarians become cosmic philosophers when table partners ask about the mysteries of grape nuts. Vegetables have replaced living together, Arabs and running as enchantments to be "into." Vegetarians can quote their own such as Shelley or Shaw. The latter, who lived into his 90s, regularly enlisted dinner partners by referring to the meat on his neighbors' plates as the corpses of fellow creatures.

So now John Melcher is back to being one of the pack, a herd member of Congress as anonymous as the cows back at the Lazy B. His chance to live a little—to get the diethylstilbestrol out of his system and the adulation of Washington hostesses into it—is gone. He is sending out pictures of himself salivating before steaks.

But even the pictures are risky. What is Senator Melcher doing, if not eating vegetarians? Montana's cattle are hale advertisers of the vegetarian way, because what do they eat but 25 pounds a day of grasses and grains, consuming the same kind of vitamins of the classic vegetarian diet beloved by Shelley, Shaw and the darlings whom Washington hostesses fight among themselves to have in next Friday night.

"THAT'S A LOT OF CARROTS IN MY BOOKS!"

The Fiesta's main competition is going to be the Rabbit. The cars are very similar. The Fiesta offers a tad more rear-seat room, but the Rabbit is a shade quicker. In most other areas, the two are so close in performance and so similar in design that there is little to choose between them. Official review by Quote: Rich Cephes Popular Science July 1977

'Uneven Activity' in Provinces

WASHINGTON (CP) — U.S. exporters considering Canadian operations this year should "select among Canada's provincial markets carefully," a U.S. commerce department study says.

The department's semi-annual world trade outlook says that because of economic and political problems, economic activity in the Canadian provinces will be "highly uneven" for the rest of the year.

Among factors placing a drag on Canada's economy are "uncertainties regarding the general economic situation, high unemployment and idle production capacity, the cautious attitude of business as reflected in reduced projected capital equipment expenditures and the unsettling influence of the separatist movement in the province of Quebec," the department says.

Inflationary tendencies are Canada's No. 1 problem affecting its ability to stimulate growth.

Continued growth of the U.S. economy will benefit Canada, it adds, but the spill-over effects "will probably not be significant until toward the end of the year."

But consumer spending has remained strong and markets for U.S. goods should remain attractive, although a drop in the exchange value of the Canadian dollar has made foreign goods more expensive, it notes.

The report predicts the Canadian dollar will remain below the U.S. dollar for the rest of the year. Interest rates are expected to move closer to U.S. rates, thus reducing the tendency for Canadians to seek capital funds in the U.S.

ed States and avoiding a return to the upward pressure on the Canadian dollar.

Canada's merchandise trade balance is expected to continue to improve this year, it says. But real economic growth is not expected to exceed 3.8 per cent, unemployment likely will stay at about a 7.9-per-cent seasonally adjusted rate and the 1977 current account deficit will be about $4 billion.

The report says Canada's over-all imports and exports rose during the first quarter of the year, by eight and 12 per cent, respectively. Both the United States and Japan increased shipments to Canada by 10 per cent and Canada increased exports to the United States by 15 per cent.

In analyzing Canada's regions, the report says that despite uncertainty caused by Quebec's Parti Quebecois government, some market potential exists for products related to energy generators, pumps, compressors, converters and valves. As well, the province cannot meet its needs for process control equipment, instrumentation requirements or automation and efficiency equipment.

It says the British Columbia economy is growing at a faster rate than Canada as a whole and should offer continued trade opportunities for U.S. exporters, particularly in the area of capital equipment for repair and modernization. In Ontario, the Toronto area offers a strong market for new manufactured products, with particular emphasis on building supplies, hardwood, chemicals, food processing and packaging equipment, pollution control devices and electronic components.

The report says Manitoba is promoting investment in food processing plants to handle locally-produced raw materials. Construction, farm and recreation equipment also is expected to be in demand.

Saskatchewan offers a market for food processing, mining and construction equipment as well as environmental protection technology. Alberta is promoting petrochemical, agricultural processing and forest product projects, it says. Construction and drilling equipment, natural gas plants and gathering systems and medical supplies have good potential for U.S. exporters.

Commercial prospects in Atlantic Canada include equipment for the coal mining industry, hotel and motel supplies, farm equipment for root crops and logging equipment, it adds.

Harmony in House! 12 Bills Approved

The NDP claimed a victory Thursday when Environment Minister Jim Nielsen bowed to opposition pressure to amend the Greenbelt Act.

"It's a bloody big victory," party whip Dennis Cooke (NDP - New Westminster) said in an interview. "I've never seen anything like it."

Government willingness to amend the bill came on a day when both sides of the B.C. legislature co-operated to pass 12 separate pieces of legislation through committee and third reading stages.

The 12, plus four others, were then given royal assent by Hon. R. A. Wootton, retired B.C. Supreme Court justice, named by order-in-council to fill in for Lt.-Gov. Walter Owen, and Chief Justice John Farris, who were both unavailable.

The NDP had objected to a section of the Greenbelt Act, which gave the government power to remove from Greenbelt protection, land which had been willed or given to the government.

Bob Skelly (NDP - Alberni), opposition environment critic, had called on the government to relieve itself of that power.

Nielsen also accepted an amendment from Skelly which would require public notice being given when a parcel of land is to be removed from the greenbelt. Skelly first asked for notice and a public hearing, but agreed with Nielsen that public hearings aren't always necessary.

The environment minister also agreed to delay debate on the Pesticide Control Act, until the NDP is ready with amendments it wants to propose.

In addition to the Greenbelt Act, other bills receiving Royal Assent on Thursday were:

—The Assessment Amendment Act, 1977 (No. 2), which reorganizes the municipal taxing system in the province.

—The Mobile Home Act, which regulates mobile homes in B.C.

—The Systems Act, which centralizes the provincial governments computer services.

—The B.C. Buildings Corporation Amendment Act, 1977, which shifts power from the public works ministry to the corporation.

—The Strata Titles Amendment Act, which plugs loopholes in the old act, and updates several sections.

—The Heritage Conservation Act, which provides increased protection for landmarks and other items of historic value.

—The Liquor Licensing and Amendment Act, which gives municipalities increased control over liquor licences.

—Two bills to amend the Motor Vehicles Act and one to amend the Commercial Transport Act, all basically housekeeping bills, said Transport Minister Jack Davis.

—The Companies Amendment Act, which allows companies to use the French form of their name.

—The Jury Amendment Act, which increases pay for jury duty.

—The Credit Unions Amendment Act, which streamlines existing regulations.

—The Summary Convictions Act, 1977, which increases maximum fines to $2,000 from $500.

Vander Zalm Bending On Touchy VRB Issue

Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Thursday he is prepared to remove the controversial clause in a bill which would eliminate three union locals of the Vancouver Resources Board.

The Community Resources Boards Amendment Act eliminates the resources board by integrating it into the Human Resources ministry.

Union leaders have criticized the clause which would do away with the board's local of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Vancouver Municipal and Regional Employees Union and the Social Services Employees Union.

The B.C. Federation of Labor is asking its members for the power to call a province-wide general strike to protest the clause and a similar clause in the Notre Dame University of Nelson Act.

That act would eliminate two unions, the Faculty Association of Notre Dame University, and a local of the Association of Clerical and Technical Employees.

Vander Zalm, speaking on the BCTV program Capital Comment to be aired Sunday, said the particular clause was put in as a detente.

"We felt that unless that particular clause were inserted, it would appear as if we were perhaps moving in and not providing protection which is otherwise available to these employees," the minister said.

"So we assured, in this section, that they would continue to get all benefits available to them now, and they would become members of the B.C. Government Employees Union.

"We can remove that sec-

McGeer's Absence Attacked

The opposition charged Thursday that Education Minister Pat McGeer should be found in contempt of the legislature for being absent without the authority of the house.

McGeer has been away all week on a non-governmental visit to Norway.

"This house is being impeded because of his absence," complained Bill King (NDP - Revelstoke-Slocan).

King said there are bills in McGeer's name awaiting debate and the legislature can not proceed with them until he is present.

Speaker Ed Smith said he'd look into the matter but pointed out that members of the legislature are permitted to be absent from time to time.

Smith said that there is a provision in the rules that if the number of days absent for any individual rises above 10 he can have his salary docked an appropriate amount.

Wolfe Details Assessment Levy

Finance Minister, Evan Wolfe disclosed Thursday his plans for municipal tax assessment levels for school purposes for 1978.

Wolfe said in a news release soon after the Assessment Amendment Act, 1977, (No. 2) was given Royal Assent Thursday he will recommend that residential property be assessed and taxed at 15 per cent of actual value for school purposes.

The minister also said that he plans to recommend to cabinet that commercial property be taxed at 25 per cent of actual value and industrial property at 30 per cent.

Wolfe said the new legislation will remove assessment inequalities within various classes of property and between regions in B.C. and will ensure that all properties are assessed equitably for school and hospital financing by having the actual value of property used as the basis of assessment.

He said every effort is being made to correct inequalities while avoiding serious devaluation for property owners and taxing authorities.

"Where property is seriously under-assessed in terms of the new standard, provision is made to phase in assessment increases up to 1981," Wolfe said.

"This will apply to assessment increases of more than 10 per cent in 1978."

He said assessments based on actual value do not necessarily mean an increase or decrease in taxes because taxes in municipalities depend on mill-rates struck by council.

SHOVEL AWARDED TOP JOB HUNTER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Diane McEachern, is doing, and helping others do, just what Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm would like all welfare recipients to do.

She's working, and her job is finding work for others.

Ron Stew, co-ordinator of the British Columbia government's Provincial Rehabilitation and Employment Program (PREP), said McEachern, 35, was receiving $220 a month on welfare 18 months ago after a car accident left her a paraplegic.

"We decided to place Diane as an incentive worker with PREP because of her aggressiveness to work," Stew said Wednesday.

"She's now full time and earning about $800 with us and she's just fantastic."

McEachern, who works at PREP's Kelowna office, pulled in 50 full-time jobs last week, has landed 102 jobs in a month, and her efforts have won her a silver shovel, symbol of Vander Zalm's back-to-work campaign.

When Vander Zalm became human resources minister, he was quoted as saying that people on welfare should get a shovel and get out and work.

VGH Man Named McClelland Aide

Dr. Chapin Key, executive director of Vancouver General Hospital, was named Thursday Health Minister Bob McClelland's executive director of health programs.

McClelland also announced the appointment of Jack Bainbridge, president of the Canadian College of Health Service Executives, to the post of associate deputy minister.

Bainbridge will be responsible for the planning, program development and support services of the ministry, while Key will assist deputy health minister Jim Mainprize with the medical, hospital and community health programs.

McClelland said the appointments reduce the number of deputy minister positions from three to one. Two deputies are retiring.

Dr. George Elliott, deputy minister in charge of community health programs, and Bill Lyle, deputy minister of medical and hospital programs, will be retired by October.

"The province owes them a great debt of gratitude," said McClelland of the retiring deputies.

P.S. I consider this to be one of the more attractive listings on today's market, as this property is unique! Sensibly priced, this residence has many of the earmarks and characteristics of properties usually to be found in the more expensive range.

Drug Case Ruling Was Proper, Supreme Court Justice Rules

A Texada Island man was properly committed for trial by a Victoria provincial court judge earlier this year Mr. Justice David Verchere of B.C. Supreme Court has ruled.

He rejected an application by George Arthur Falkner to quash his commitment for trial in Victoria county court by provincial court judge Harold Alder, after a preliminary hearing which ended April 2.

Falkner, along with three others, will be tried this fall on charges of conspiracy to traffic in marijuana between Nov. 1, 1975, and April 17, 1976, at Nanaimo, Powell River, Vancouver, Surrey and elsewhere. The four persons were arrested in April, 1976.

Falkner, through his lawyer T. E. Rafael, argued that he was not properly before Judge Alder, that the preliminary hearing continued when it was not apparent that he lived, was arrested or that the alleged offences were within the judge's territorial jurisdiction and that the judge committed him to trial in Victoria county court.

Verchere said the real issue was the jurisdiction of a judge of the provincial court of B.C. Citing the Provincial Court Act, which says the court has "jurisdiction throughout the province," Verchere rejected the claim.

He also saw no constitutional conflict with the Criminal Code.

Verchere said the Victoria county court has jurisdiction to hear the trial.

The Criminal Code provides that every court of criminal jurisdiction that has power to try an indictable offence is competent to try the accused person for that offence if he is "found" within the territorial jurisdiction.

Verchere said it was clear that Falkner was "found" in Victoria when he appeared for his preliminary hearing Oct. 25, 1976, and the hearing started.

He cited a precedent which said a person is "found" in any place where he is actually present.

In any event, he added, Victoria county court was competent to try Falkner because he had been committed for trial in that court.

The attorney-general of Canada, which opposed Falkner's application, was represented by Victoria lawyer Cecil Branson.

LANDMARK PROPERTIES 386-6762

Kiss your landlord goodbye.

"OPEN NEXT WEEKEND"

1366... We believe you should own, not rent

Every time you pay the rent you're saying goodbye to hundreds of dollars. You'll never see those hard-earned dollars again. Why do that any longer when every monthly payment could be building equity for you in your own apartment home? Not only could your dollars be working for you at 1366, but the payments could be no larger than the rent you're presently signing away each month.

1366... So you don't have a million in the bank

Relax. You don't need much capital. You don't need to touch your life savings. If you want to live at 1366 we can help you with creative, flexible financial guidance, tailored to your needs. We can help you make your deal. Apartment homes at 1366 are available for payments as small as $250.00 per month. Generous terms and special considerations are available to you if you qualify for our special 8% mortgage. Come talk with us so we can give you all the good financial news.

1366... We believe in children

Welcome to the only building in Victoria with child care facilities on the premises! We know that working parents and single parents really need available child care—during the work day and for that evening out. Well, our child care isn't half a mile away or across town. It's right in the and move into your new apartment home at building. And outside there's a playground. At 1366, it's all right there for children.

1366... Apartment homes for people

Our building wasn't designed by a cookie-cutter. You'll have a chance to view 2 and 3 bedroom suites. Most have balconies. Some have garden plots. Some have private roof gardens.

You'll find suites on one floor. Others are up-and-down suites, there are a number of different floorplans to choose from. And, instead of being tucked away like dungeons, all the dining rooms are near natural light.

1366 features roof gardens for all residents and their guests. Just perfect for that barbecue or for watching a beautiful sunset. Of course, there's a laundry room, storage lockers for everyone and a recreation room.

1366 is on high ground. You may want to live there just for the fantastic views to the north and west.

1366... All the convenience you're looking for

Needless to say, you'll have your own parking (underground or above ground), but you won't be using your car that much. It's just a short walk to major shopping from 1366. Schools are just a few blocks away. The neighborhood is filled with recreational facilities. And downtown Victoria is just minutes away.

1366... The key to your future

And the future can be right now. We're presently open for viewing. We'd love to have you come by so we can show you around and answer your questions.

10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Every day of the week.

Anglican Social Involvement Reaffirmed

CALGARY (CP) — Top leaders of Canada's 1.5 million Anglicans reaffirmed their support for church involvement in social issues.

Thursday, despite opposition from some members who feel such involvement is unwarranted.

Most Rev. E. W. Scott of Toronto, primate of the Anglican Church of Canada, said at the conclusion of the church's 28th general synod here that many of the 200 lay and clerical delegates didn't fully understand the reason for such involvement.

Nonetheless the church will continue to support such action, including stands taken by the much-criticized Public Social Responsibility (PSR) Unit, Scott told a news conference following the week-long gathering.

The PSR unit has come under attack from church-going Canadian businessmen who felt its criticism of banks for dealing with countries which violate human rights and its opposition to immediate northern development are ill-advised and badly conceived.

Scott said, however, that the church found the unit had based its criticism on proper theological convictions, careful scrutiny of conscience and church teaching.

The archbishop was supported by the synod's prolocutor, Archbishop Harry Hickey of Montreal, who said he has never known the church not to wrestle with difficult social problems in his 35 years attending such sessions.

"It's just impossible for the church to back-off such areas," he said.

The majority of synod delegates also agreed the church must continue to fill the role of critic of society when the Christian imperatives of charity and human understanding are at stake.

It was also agreed to refer an economy committee report for study by church members. It urges the church to lobby the federal government for a guaranteed annual income of $3,300 a year for each Canadian family.

Retired 'Not Employees'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The pulp industry said Thursday in a submission to the B.C. Labor Relations Board it does not consider retired persons are employees or that they are included in the bargaining units of the pulp unions which represent pulp industry workers.

Jack Giles, counsel for the Pulp and Paper Industrial Relations Bureau, also questioned whether the board has the jurisdiction to hear an application from the Canadian Paperworkers Union (CPU) without first giving notice and an opportunity to all persons whose rights might be affected.

The CPU earlier this week launched a complaint against the industry that it was not bargaining in good faith by refusing to discuss improved pension benefits for retired workers.

It is believed to be the first time a legal case of this nature has been brought in Canada and a hearing is expected.

to be announced by the board soon.

Giles said in the four-page submission that retired persons are not members of a unit for which the applicant unions have been certified by the board.

He said the union has no statutory authority to represent retired workers and the board should not hear the application unless given satisfactory evidence that the union has the actual authority or that all the retirees affected have been given notice of the proceedings.

He said the right to bargain and the employer's obligation to bargain extend only to employees in an appropriate unit for which a trade union has been certified by the board.

No Fishing Extension

VANCOUVER (CP) — The International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission says there will be no extensions of fishing time in convention waters this week because of a substantial imbalance in the catch of pink salmon by Canadian fishermen.

The Canadian troll fishery off the west coast of Vancouver Island has made unprecedented large catches of pinks this year.

The commission says Canadians have caught about 900,000 pinks while the United States fishermen have caught 130,000.

For sockeye, cumulative records show U.S. fishermen have caught about 1.69 million fish while Canadians have landed about 1.619 million.

Trident Sub Launching To Be Half-Year Late

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP) — The first Trident nuclear submarine should be ready for action by July, 1980, half a year later than originally planned, the U.S. Navy says.

The start of training for two 150-man Trident crews has been postponed from this fall to January, 1978, at the submarine's future home base nearby Bangor, navy officials said.

The navy said construction delays are not expected to affect construction of the base, procurement of Trident missiles or long-range plans to gradually decommission Polaris and Poseidon submarines.

Last month the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics Corp. announced it could not finish the lead sub, the Ohio, by the contract deadline date of April, 1978. The navy says it appears that the Ohio will be delivered in October, 1979, and will cost more than the previously estimated $1.024 billion.

The as-yet unnamed commanding and executive officers of the boat are to begin their training at Bangor next month.

The navy intends to ask for three Trident subs every two years for the foreseeable future. So far, 13 have been authorized by Congress. Plans call for the first 10 to be at Bangor and additional subs to be on the East Coast.

General Dynamics blamed the delay on "construction, manning and production problems" at its Groton, Conn., shipyard and said inflation would drive up the price.

OFFICES GOING EMPTY

VANCOUVER (CP) — Office vacancies in downtown Vancouver are at their highest levels in 25 years, says a survey released Thursday by the Real Estate Board of Greater Vancouver.

The vacancy rate more than tripled to 12.25 per cent from 3.7 per cent between June, 1976, and April, 1977, for privately-owned office buildings of more than 20,000 square feet.

Including government-owned office space, the vacancy rate downtown in April was 8.9 per cent compared with about one per cent in 1971.

The survey, conducted for the board by the Western Real Estate Corp., indicates that the rate will go even higher because of new construction.

The survey also shows that residential land values have hardly risen during the last year, and indicates that apartment vacancy rates are likely to ease further.

Western Real Estate did not include buildings completed in the six months preceding the survey which covered office markets in Vancouver, Burnaby, Richmond, New Westminster, North Vancouver city and district and West Vancouver.

Ont. Blamed for Ignoring Spill

TORONTO (CP) — The Ontario Environmental Appeal Board has accused the provincial environment ministry of allowing a major spill of a dangerous chemical more than three years ago to deteriorate into what it called a catastrophic situation.

An appeal board tribunal recently ruled that "it is clear that by delaying initial clean-up instructions until June, 1976, the ministry of environment has allowed the situation to deteriorate from serious to catastrophic."

The spill of about 1,000 gallons of oil containing 70-per-cent polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) occurred in 1973 when a CP Rail freight train derailed near Dowling, Ont., 25 miles northwest of Sudbury. The oil leaked from two ruptured electrical transformers.

PCB, a highly toxic chemical compound used mainly for insulating electrical components, has been found in scientific studies to cause birth defects, nervous disorders, changes in liver functions and cancer.

Leslie Fitz, industrial abatement officer for the ministry's northeastern region, said in an interview Thursday that high concentrations of PCBs still are found in the soil and water table at the spill site.

Fitz added there is a possibility the chemical might migrate into the ground water drinking supply of the 3,000 residents of Dowling.

The appeal board hearing showed that the environment ministry ordered the removal of 115 drums of contaminated soil but "failed to require further action from the company until 22 months after the accident although soil samples taken in May, 1974, showed that removal of PCBs was far from satisfactory."

The appeal board hearing followed an environment ministry order issued last March 21 that required CP Rail to remove all soil contaminated with PCBs.

The board also ordered the company and the environment ministry to share the costs of the cleanup.

CP Rail is opposing the ruling, saying it will not accept further financial responsibility for cleaning up the site because it was not responsible for the accident which caused the spill.

Market Boards Defended

RICHMOND (CP) — Elimination of marketing boards would mean the end of the family farm, empty Canada's rural areas and leave consumers at the mercy of multinational corporations, Max Roytenberg, general manager of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency (CEMA) told the B.C. legislature's food inquiry committee Thursday.

He warned that the end of marketing boards, particularly national supply-management schemes, would eventually lead to Canada relying on the United States for most of its food supply.

He told Harvey Schroeder (SC — Chilliwack) that since CEMA overcame its initial startup problems it has given consumers both stable prices and supplies while retaining 98 per cent of Canadian egg production for Canadian farmers and processors.

Told that U.S. eggs recently sold in Seattle for 55 cents a dozen compared with 95 cents a dozen in Vancouver, Roytenberg said that the total Canadian economy must be taken into account when looking at the egg industry.

"We have in Canada developed a social welfare approach to our economy more developed than some of our major competitors such as the U.S. and Western Europe," he said.

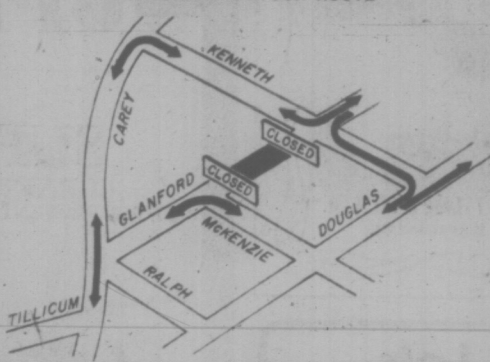

"We have government pension plans, as well as social security, medicare, unemployment insurance, minimum wage rates, all of which raise the costs of doing business within our Canadian system."

Canada can eliminate the marketing board system and switch to total free trade, he said, but the result would be the same as what has occurred in the secondary Canadian food industry.

"We would have to expect the rapid concentration of agriculture resources in a few hands and eventually in multinational corporations, probably based in the U.S., he said.

Job Openings Rise

OTTAWA (CP) — Statistics Canada said Thursday that there were an average 32,400 full- and part-time job openings during the three-month period ended July 31, down 12 per cent from the comparable 1976 period but 26 per cent more than in the previous three months.

Full-time job openings rose by 21 per cent during the latest three months to 45,300 from 37,300 in the previous three months ended June 30. Long-term job vacancies — unfilled for more than four weeks — rose by 14 per cent to 14,000.

For every 1,000 existing jobs in the latest three-month period, six were vacant. A year ago, the comparable rate was seven vacancies for every 1,000 jobs.

WE OWE $23.13B

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadians were burdened by $23.13 billion of debt at the end of June, a 14.3-per-cent increase in the past year that occurred mostly because of an increase in bank loans, Statistics Canada figures released Thursday show.

Personal loans owed to chartered banks totalled $17.69 billion at the end of June, a 19.2-per-cent increase from 1976 levels.

Quebec savings banks were owed another $82 million in personal loans. Policy loans from life insurance companies accounted for $1.24 billion of the outstanding debt total, up 5.6 per cent over last year.

But small loans of $214 million owed to consumer loan and sales finance companies were down 7.8 per cent from 1976 levels.

TOWN OF SIDNEY NOTICE

Due to the prevailing weather conditions, the Regional District is experiencing great difficulty in maintaining water supplies under the present situation of heavy demand. It is proving impossible to fill reservoirs overnight ready to meet the peak demand of the following day and unless this trend is altered there will not be sufficient water for distribution.

Consequently, at the request of the Regional District, Council has placed an immediate ban on all unnecessary and indiscriminate use of water, including car and boat washing and lawn sprinkling, until further notice. Persons not observing these restrictions are liable for prosecution under the provisions of the Town Bylaws. The co-operation of the residents is urgently required and requested, to alleviate a critical situation.

AFTER THE STORM comes the fun as Mike Johnson (front), 8, and Alton Reid, 9, discover as they pedal along flooded street in Imperial, Calif., after tropical storm swept up from Mexico.

Tobacco Support Lacks Logic

WASHINGTON (AP) — James Johnson, 47, a Republican congressman from Colorado, sponsored an amendment to eliminate federal price supports and loans to tobacco growers. The measure was defeated.

Logic was on his side since, as he put it, there is something schizophrenic about a government that promotes tobacco as a farm product and condemns it as a health hazard.

But stopping the price support program, as his amendment proposed, is hazardous to interests of farmers, most of them concentrated in a half-dozen Southern and border states.

Congressmen from those states have considerable seniority, which ups the odds against repeal of the tobacco price support program.

Nevertheless, Johnson, who smokes, plans to try again soon with an amendment gradually to eliminate supports after two or three years. That way, he said, the agriculture department would have time to study the impact on farmers and consider steps to ease their problems.

But the paradox stands. The government spends about $44 million a year to support tobacco prices, inspect and grade crops and underwrite research on production. The same government spends $3 million directly, and much more indirectly to cope with tobacco as a health hazard.

Powerful economic arguments are on the other side of the ledger. Tobacco is the fifth-largest cash crop for U.S. farmers, and about 600,000 of them get some income by growing it.

Tobacco generates about $6 billion a year in taxes, and about $1.6 billion in exports.

President Jimmy Carter has said he supports the tobacco support program. Johnson says the industry is healthy enough to do without government price supports. But program advocates contend that without them, thousands of small farmers would face bankruptcy, corporate agriculture would take over an increasing share of production and more tobacco would be on the market.

Controls on tobacco acreage go along with the price supports.

Joseph R. Califano Jr., secretary of health, education and welfare who used to smoke but quit, says the government should examine what it does to encourage cigarette smoking.

"We should certainly not be doing anything to make it cheaper," he said. But the support program doesn't make tobacco cheaper, it makes it more expensive.

In Congress, efforts to eliminate the support program run into the same argument: if the government withdraws from the market, tobacco will cost less and more people may start smoking.

Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland, who chews tobacco, says he'll handle the crop program and leave the smoking-and-health issue alone. "I'm not qualified to judge in that regard, and Joe Califano assured me that he's not going to get into the price support issue," he said.

Tighter Control Eyed

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government intends to introduce legislation in the Commons this fall to tighten control over the maze of companies it owns that are involved in everything from running museums to building nuclear reactors.

An 83-page discussion paper, released by the Trudeau government today, suggests that the cabinet be given power to overrule decisions of crown corporation boards of directors as the major initiative to bring them back into line.

The legislation will be brought in after the completion of the auditor-general and the federal Royal Commission on financial management and accountability.

A statement from Government House Leader Allan Rock said the proposals result from a three-year study of the companies made by the privy council office.

But the review took on new importance in the last 10 months following release of a report from Auditor-General J. J. Macdonell criticizing "weak and ineffective" controls over financial management of crown corporations.

Macdonell was particularly concerned over the operations of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. which paid out $10.5 million in agents fees in nuclear power station sales to Argentina and South Korea without adequate documentation of how the money was spent.

It led to an investigation by a Commons committee that is still under way into the payments, which opposition MPs say they fear may have been used as bribes or payoffs.

The government has said it previously steered clear of direct control of the corporations because of fears expressed by the opposition that it could make the firms susceptible to political pressure.

The discussion paper proposes a way around this by requiring any cabinet decision of a company to be tabled in Parliament within 15 days after it is issued.

The paper says the government is examining some of its companies to see whether it can reduce its ownership or sell them outright to private business. They were initially set up to achieve broad social and policy objectives, not strictly for commercial reasons.

It also says that in the future the government cannot be committed to owning part or all of a company without the approval of the cabinet. It has been possible in the past to create such companies without authority of the cabinet or any other central agency.

Crown corporations will be barred from setting up subsidiaries or acquiring other companies without the approval of the cabinet.

Each of the government-owned companies will be required to submit to government for approval corporate plans for a three to five year period.

Treasury board will be given power to dictate the form of the companies annual reports to improve their quality.

POLAR SHIPS?

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union plans to create a shipping route soon through the Arctic Circle, the Soviet minister of merchant marine said in an interview aboard the icebreaker Arktika, returning from an historic voyage to the North Pole.

The interview was reported today in the Communist party paper Pravda in a dispatch describing the voyage of the atomic icebreaker, which on Wednesday became the first surface vessel to reach the top of the world.

"The time is near when between the two extreme points of the polar region of our country, caravans of ships will take the shortest route—through the centre of the Arctic basin, and not along the coast," Timofei Guzenko said.

The opening of a polar shipping route would crown efforts that began in czarist days to master Russia's Arctic frontier, stretching thousands of miles from Murmansk in the west to the far eastern tip of Siberia across the Bering Strait from Alaska.

Weed Trimmer Hazard

About 40,000 Black and Decker weed and grass trimmers are being recalled throughout North America because of a possible electric shock hazard.

An estimated 5,000 were sold in Western Canada, including Victoria.

The orange-colored model No. 9209 Type 1 trimmers, which use a nylon line to cut weeds and grass, have an electrical shock potential the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission has found.

The trimmer model was manufactured this spring and summer and retailed for $9.95. They were sold unassembled with a two-part handle which had to be put together before use.

When the consumer puts the two-part handle together it is possible to damage the insulation surrounding the electrical cord running down inside the handle, CPSC said.

City Firm Wins Paving Contract

Victoria Paving Company has been awarded a $1.3 million contract to improve and resurface about 19 miles of West Coast Highway between Tugwell Creek, near Sooke, and 11 miles past Jordan River.

A $2.5 million widening project along Highway 97 north of Kelowna will begin in two weeks, the highways department also announced.

A Kelowna firm, Geddes Construction Company Ltd., was awarded the contract.

"Such damage could result in serious electrical shock."

The CPSC has urged all consumers to stop using the trimmer and return it to the nearest Black and Decker factory service centre.

(Vancouver is the nearest such centre for Island residents. Newspaper advertisements will appear shortly to outline details for returning the trimmers. Phone inquiries can be directed to Vancouver, 112-876-8838, or to the Victoria Black and Decker representative, Hastings Vacuum and Appliance Service.)

The service centres will convert the trimmers to the safe Type 2 model at no charge to the consumer.

Black and Decker has also mailed certified letters with recall instructions to consumers who mailed in registration cards packed with the trimmer.

POLITICS IN CANADA

TWO COURSES, DOWNTOWN, IN THE LUNCH HOUR

One, taught by Dr. Gerald Kristianson, is about the structure of government and the nature of politics in Canada. (Political Science 100)

The other is about elections, parties and pressure groups in Canada, and is taught by Dr. Walter Young. (Political Science 501)

You can take these for credit toward a degree, or just because you're interested.

Canadian Government will be on Mondays and Wednesdays, 12:10 to 1:30 p.m. (Sept.-April).

Elections and Parties will be on Thursdays, 12:10 to 1:30 p.m. (Sept.-April).

Courses begin the week of September 12, 1977.

Vendors Dislike New Penny

HAMILTON (CP) — A decision by the Royal Canadian Mint to reduce the size of one-cent coins might create havoc for pay telephones and vending machines, Roy McKinney, vice-president of the Canadian Automatic Merchandising Association, said Thursday.

He said the smaller coin might interfere with mechanisms designed for dimes.

Vending machine owners must decide whether to make the conversion or eliminate one-cent sales.

The new coin to be issued in January will be lighter and smaller.

Al La Porter of Toronto, one of Canada's largest distributors of vending machines, said Thursday it might cost as much as $100,000 to convert the 5,000 penny candy and gum machines he owns.

La Porter said he is annoyed the government did not advise his company about the new coin.

He wants the government to compensate him for the unexpected cost and give coin machine owners a year to make the changeover.

"Our slots operate by coin circumference and not weight," said Nick Vukmanich, owner of a Hamilton vending company.

He said he has 400 one-cent machines which will have to be replaced.

"One-cent gum is fast disappearing and maybe by the time these coins come out there won't be anything left to sell for one cent."

Mei James, spokesman for Bell Canada, said the new pennies will fit into the single-slot telephones, but he did not know whether they would activate the telephones.

The 1978 penny will be three millimetres smaller than coins being minted now and will weigh 1.8 grams compared with the present 3.24 grams.

School Rights Probed

Labor Minister Allan Williams said Thursday he's asked his department for a report on the application of the Human Rights Code to the admission policies of independent schools.

Williams made the statement in response to a question by Liberal leader Gordon Gibson who had asked if there was "any section of the code under which an individual could file a complaint" against a private school with discriminatory admission policies.

Gibson said he is concerned about the matter because of statements by Kathleen Ruff, director of the human rights branch.

Ruff said earlier this week that section 22 of the code exempts educational organizations that are not operating for profit, allowing such schools to discriminate in hiring teachers and admitting students.

Ruff's comments contradicted statements made last week by Education Minister Pat McGeer, who had said that the code could be used to police the admissions policies of independent schools.

Elvis 'Walking Pharmacy'

Pills to Sleep, Pills to Get Up

By LARRY ROYTER
The Washington Post

Last August, National Star reporter Steve Dunleavy heard that Elvis Presley had fired three of his bodyguards. Dunleavy, now with the New York Post and author of its recent book, Elvis: The Surrender Letter, sought out the three bodyguards, questioned them about the erratic side of Elvis' private life and wrote a book, Elvis: What Happened?

The book — with an initial printing of 400,000 copies — was published with little notice or fanfare on Aug. 1. But within six hours of Presley's death on Tuesday, Ballantine Books had presses on Long Island spinning out an additional 250,000 copies, which the company expects to have in stores by the weekend.

"Frankly, I really don't know exactly how we've sold so far," Ballantine president Ron Busch said Wednesday. "We've really been swamped with orders."

The book, purportedly culled from 300 hours of taped interviews with the bodyguards, alleges that Presley hoarded firearms, thought he was a prophet, was morbidly fascinated with corpses, tried to put a contract out on the man who Presley felt "stole" his wife, Priscilla, away, led a Howard Hughes-esque life of seclusion and took a variety of drugs.

"I can't say he was taking no drugs at all," Dr. Jerry Francisco, the medical examiner who performed the autopsy on the singer, said Wednesday. "His own doctor has said he was taking appetite depressants. There was no evidence of any abnormal, illegal drug use."

The U.S. Turtle Just Sat There

BOISEVAIN, Man. (CP) — It could have been such a proud moment for the United States.

The Canadian and U.S. representatives were at the starting gate, waiting for the gun to sound to begin the crawl-off for the world championship at the sixth annual international turtle derby.

Over the loudspeakers poured the stirring strains of the Stars and Stripes Forever. And that, say observers, may have been the undoing of the U.S. chances for the world title.

Apparently overcome by the patriotism triggered by the

DELAY-BOMBS HIT BELFAST

BELFAST (Reuters) — Twenty-six fire bombs exploded Thursday night as Irish guerrillas began to use new detonators that can set off a bomb up to three years after it has been planted.

LI-Col. Derrick Patrick, the British Army's chief explosives expert here, said the electric timing devices, used in remote-control and communications systems, can be bought from specialist suppliers.

Asked about allegations in the book that Presley "was on pills all day and would give himself shots in the arm or leg with those little plastic syringes," Francisco said, "It would seem to me, as a professional, that if the use was that frequent, that severe, we would have found some evidence during our examination. Not finding them, I can't give credibility to those statements."

"I wouldn't want to comment on what the autopsy revealed," Busch said.

Members of the extraordinarily tight-knit Presley inner circle have been in seclusion at his guarded Graceland mansion in Memphis, and were unavailable for comment.

According to the book, which the bodyguards say they will substantiate with lie-detector tests, Presley:

— Was a prodigious consumer of a wide variety of drugs. "He takes pills to go to sleep," bodyguard Red West is quoted as saying. "He takes pills to get up. He takes pills to go on the job, and he takes pills to stop him from going to the job. There have been times where he was so hyper on uppers that he has had trouble breathing, and on one occasion he thought he was going to die. . . . He is a walking pharmaceutical shop."

— Was convinced that he had extraordinary religious powers. Presley, the book alleges, "firmly believes he has the powers of psychic healing by the laying on of hands. He believes he has the strength of will to move clouds in the air. . . . He firmly believes he is a prophet who was destined to lead, designated by God for a special role in life."

— Had a "pathological obsession with uniforms and badges of authority" and was fascinated with pistols, rockets, rifles and other weapons. "Elvis is never without a gun," Sonny West claims. "Mostly he carries two or even three on him. Even when he is on stage, he carries a tiny four-shot derringer in the top of his boot."

— Once ordered Red West to kill Mike Stone, the karate instructor, who Presley held responsible for the disintegration of his marriage, and frequently would shoot holes in television when a program displeased him. "I can't tell you how many television sets went their death at the hands of Elvis and his shooting," West says. "He would shoot out television sets in hotel rooms and in any of the houses he has."

— Enjoyed regular "fireworks nights" in which he would set off a variety of explosive devices and once deliberately set out to destroy, with a specially hired construction bulldozer, a home he had bought. "Elvis starts up the bulldozer and yells out to Vernon, 'you better move, Daddy,'" the book reports. "Vernon asks why and Elvis says, 'Because I'm going to knock the goddamn house down.' . . . In less than an hour we (had) just knocked the whole superstructure down to where it drops right into the basement and it's burling up a storm."

— Made a special trip to Washington during the Nixon administration in a campaign to receive a federal drug enforcement officer's badge. At first rebuffed by then-deputy director John Finlator, Presley eventually showed up at the rear entrance of the White House, "where he was allegedly met by presidential aide Egli Krogh and ushered into Nixon's office." "President Nixon awarded Presley the badge," the book relates. Presley smiled triumphantly at (his bodyguards) and said, "Who said something can't be done?"

The three bodyguards held a press conference in Beverly Hills Wednesday afternoon to tell the public they aren't "bloodsuckers trying to capitalize on the death of Elvis Presley." They said their book was written long before his death.

"I feel he just got confused between the stone race and the flat race. In the stone race, the last one out of the gate wins," he explained.

Earlier, Spike had beaten out 10 other turtles for the Canadian title before more than 1,000 cheering spectators.

"They put some restrictions on us," he said. "They made us corroborate a lot of the allegations with independent back-up, just as if we were doing a news story. They made us take out about 10 per cent of the book. It was tasteless, but actually very accurate. A lot of it was crazy drug and sex stuff."

Presley's unexpected death also triggered action at other New York publishing houses. Pocket Books, which several years ago published May Mann's "Elvis and the Colonel," an account of Presley's relationship with his manager of 20 years, honorary Colonel Tom Parker, announced that it was planning to send the book back to press—but in an altered form.

According to Mary Hall of Pocket Books, a division of Simon and Schuster, New York

Blanket of flowers for Elvis

Times reporter Molly Ivins, who wrote that paper's Presley obituary, has been contracted to update the Mann book, which will be retitled "The Private Elvis." Pocket Books has already received 250,000 orders for the book, Hall says, and copies should be in bookstores in a few days.

Howard Kaminsky, president of Warner Books, said that his firm Wednesday received "the largest one-day order for any title in our history" for Jerry Hopkins' widely praised biography of Presley, "Elvis." Over 26,000 copies of that book were ordered by wholesalers across the country, and Warner's was rushing to meet the unprecedented demand.

Clearing Mudd's Name

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter was asked Thursday to reverse the military conviction of a Maryland physician who set the broken leg of John Wilkes Booth, the assassin of president Abraham Lincoln.

History buffs have long questioned the trial of Dr. Samuel Alexander Mudd, who was sent to a swampy prison in the Florida Keys after being found guilty in the alleged conspiracy to assassinate Lincoln.

The appeal to Carter was led by Mudd's grandson, Dr. Richard Mudd, Representative Paul Simon (Dem. Ill.), a biographer of Lincoln, and Senator Charles Mathias Jr. (Rep. Md.), who represents the state where The Civil War-era doctor lived.

"They just made a huge mistake," said Mudd. "My grandfather should be exonerated."

Mistake of not, the name of Mudd was immortalized with the expression "his name is mud."

One of the more famous descendants of the physician is CBS reporter Roger Mudd, who also expresses indignation over the whole affair.

"I think Dr. Mudd got railroaded," said Roger Mudd, a nephew six times removed.

The letter to Carter contends that Samuel Mudd had nothing to do with the assassination and that the doctor, a civilian, was the victim of an unfair trial by a military commission.

It also notes that although Mudd had met Booth prior to Lincoln's assassination, Booth was disguised in a beard when the doctor set his broken leg.

Lang Sues for Libel

SASKATOON (CP) — Lawyers acting for Transport Minister, Otto Lang have filed a libel suit against the Canadian Magazine publishers Southstar Publications Ltd. and Roy MacGregor, author of an article about Lang in the magazine.

The statement of claim was received here late last week and asked for undisclosed damages.

The June 4 edition of the magazine containing the article was not distributed by the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix and the Regina Leader-Post following the threat of legal action by the transport minister's lawyers.

The two newspapers are the only ones in Saskatchewan which carry the weekend supplement.

Dolly Likely Tops

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Dolly Parton and Waylon Jennings are prime candidates for top honors in the Country Music Association's annual awards program.

Five finalists in 10 categories will be announced within the next two weeks. The winners will be announced during televised awards show at the Grand Ole Opry house Oct. 10.

It appears that no "outsiders" will challenge for awards this year as Olivia Newton-John did in 1974 and John Denver did in 1975. When Miss Newton-John was named female vocalist of the year and Denver won entertainer of the year, some people protested that they were not genuine country singers.

Miss Parton and Jennings are leading contenders for No. 1 female and male vocalist and for entertainer of the year — the top award.

During the last year, Miss Parton became the first woman country singer with her own syndicated television show.

LONDON — Optician John Clenton was convicted of assault when a client bugged her bra to prove that he was making indecent overtures to her — but he learned Thursday he could remain an optician.

Clenton, 45, was convicted of three charges of indecent assault after an 18-year-old married woman complained that he had touched her unnecessarily while she was under hypnosis for the insertion of contact lenses.

Clenton was caught in the act when police burst into his consulting room following pick-ups from a microphone concealed in the woman's bra.

Clenton vowed then never to use hypnosis again.

MINNEAPOLIS — Hubert Humphrey, a political battler for 30 years, is facing the biggest battle of his life — terminal cancer.

Humphrey has an inoperable tumor in the pelvis, doctors said Thursday after the Minnesota Democrat underwent surgery to relieve a blocked large intestine.

KENOSHA, Wis. — Jerry Lewis, the zany comedian whose annual charity telethon has raised millions of dollars to fight muscular dystrophy, has been nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize by Representative Les Aspin (Dem.—Wis.).

Lewis, who was rehearsing for the opening Thursday night of a two-week engagement at the Hotel Sahara in Las Vegas, said it was an honor just to be nominated.

BONN — Greta Garbo, who withdrew from public life 30 years ago, now feels she has lived a lonely wasted life and "it's too late to change it," a West German magazine reports.

In what it says is the 72-year-old Swedish movie queen's first interview since leaving the public scene, Bunte Illustrierte magazine quoted her as saying: "I have messed up my life. And it's too late to change it."

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Theft is still theft regardless of the province where it occurs.

This was the message Judge Harold Alder wanted stressed Thursday, through a translator, to a 21-year-old man from Quebec.

Alder gave Patrick Berthiaume a suspended sentence plus one year's probation after the man pleaded guilty to theft under $200.

Berthiaume was apprehended Aug. 16 after he tried to leave Universal Trading, 584 Johnson, with an amplifier under his coat.

His travelling companion, Daniel Perusse, 19, was given the same sentence after pleading guilty to possession of stolen property.

The court was told that neither man had any friends or family in the area. Nor had they any money at the time of the offences, his lawyer said.

When he told the court that Perusse had planned to leave shortly for the Okanagan, Alder said: "How's he going to find a job if he can't speak English?"

Counsel replied that picking fruit was not the sort of job that required extensive knowledge of English.

U.S. Worried

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anthony Quinton, U.S. ambassador to the Central African Empire, is being recalled for consultations in connection with the recent imprisonment of two journalists, one American and one British.

Williams Won't Rush Dam Decision

The provincial government will not be hurried in reaching a final decision on B.C. Hydro's planned Revelstoke Dam, Labor Minister Allan Williams said Thursday.

Bill King (NDP — Revelstoke-Slocan) had asked Williams in the legislature when a decision would be handed down.

"Soon," said Williams in a one-word reply that sparked laughter in the Scored benches.

"That answer may be humorous to some members on the government side," said King, "but not to the merchants in Revelstoke."

Williams said King's criticism was fair but pointed out the dam "has great significance not only for Revelstoke, but for all B.C."

WOLFE ... disagrees

$1M Loss 'More a Transfer'

Interest charges on funds borrowed for British Columbia Railway's recently abandoned Dease Lake extension, costing the Crown corporation $1 million a month, is not really a loss, Finance Minister Evan Wolfe told the legislature Thursday.

Instead, the debt-service cost is more a transfer of accounting from the former Dease Lake extension interest-repayment budget to the railway's over-all expenditure budget, he said.

"I don't agree that it can be called a loss," Wolfe added when questioned on the $1-million monthly debt by NDP Leader Dave Barrett and

Gary Laak (NDP — Vancouver Centre). Laak asked whether the government plans to reimburse the railway for the interest charges or deduct the money from the $34-million federal government loan made available to the railway earlier this year.

"The railway can't afford it (the interest payment)," said Laak, adding that it is the provincial government and not the railway which decided to halt work on the 420-mile

Dease extension into northwestern B.C.

Wolfe said legislation covering the transfer of the $34-million federal loan to the railway relates to Laak's question.

No Authority—Waterland

Forests Minister Tom Waterland said Thursday he is unable to deny timber permits to Lignum Ltd., the company which plans to close a sawmill at 70 Mile House.

Waterland said he has no jurisdiction in the matter because cutting rights are not being transferred.

"There is nothing I can do unless we rewrite the act," he said.

OTTAWA (CP) — Both sides in the complicated dispute between the post office and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) say they want to return to the bargaining table — but there has been no movement in negotiations since May 18.

"We all want to get back in the bargaining table to negotiate but it has to be more than just a meeting," CUPW president Jean-Claude Parrot said in an interview Thursday.

"It is a question of good faith," he was interviewed after two days of hearings by the Public Service Staff Relations Board into a post office complaint that the union is guilty of bad faith bargaining.

The 22,000-member union, representing mail sorters and postal clerks, has started a counter-complaint that the post office is interfering with internal union affairs by prohibiting distribution of union literature to CUPW members.

The hearing into that complaint resumes Sept. 7.

Meantime, the new national executive board of the militant postal union is wrapping up meetings to decide CUPW's next move in its rocky relationship with the government.

Negotiations broke off just one hour after they started.

The union said it called off talks because the post office was interfering with internal union affairs.

At last month's national policy convention in Halifax, the postal workers dug in for a long, tough battle with the government by giving CUPW leaders authority to call a nationwide strike if union demands are not met.

A key demand is that the government withdraw all disciplinary action taken against CUPW members for union-related activity. The union said it will not sign a new contract unless the government signs a memorandum of agreement removing sanctions imposed against CUPW members since the 1975 contract dispute.

When the union returns to the bargaining table it will seek the right to veto all technological changes it feels would affect CUPW members adversely.

The union says it is not opposed to technological changes that will improve post office efficiency, but it says members must share the benefits.

CUPW has not specified its wage demands, but it has renewed a request for a 30-hour work week with 40 hours' pay. Another demand contained in the opening bargaining list is for 10-minute coffee breaks every hour.

Postmaster-General Jean-Jacques Blais said Thursday the government has made repeated attempts to get CUPW back to the bargaining table.

In a statement issued from his Ontario riding of Nipissing, Blais denied published reports that the cabinet plans to establish a three-member royal commission into labor relations in the post office.

The union called in May for a royal commission of inquiry into post office management and Blais said at that time it might be a good idea, but he would want to talk to the union before taking action.

Parrot said the union would welcome a royal commission of inquiry. There have been no talks between the post office and the union, however, on the terms of reference of such an inquiry.

Wet Behind Ears Now But Learning Quickly

A baker's dozen neophyte firemen are undergoing training with the Victoria fire department.

The 13 recruits — the largest class in the department's history — beat out about 250 other persons in a recent competition for the positions. They started training Aug. 2 under the supervision of deputy chief Mike Belton.

The first phase of the course ends Sept. 1 when the men will be assigned to one of four platoons for a five-month probationary period. During the time the men receive $1,046 a month.

Deputy fire chief Mike Heppell said today the course has been specially designed and prepared by the department and covers the spectrum of fire protection, rescue, hydraulics, firestream application, fire prevention, chemistry of fire and first aid.

The men will also have to pass written examinations.

Heppell said the last time the department had such a large class was in 1965 when the firemen won a six-hour reduction in number of hours of work a week, from 48 to 42. Then the class totalled 12.

The current recruitment was originally 12 but was increased to 13 to replace a fireman who resigned.

See the birdie, smile, (click), and now say bye-bye to your bucks.

The Better Business Bureau has warned of a door-to-door photographer in Greater Victoria who isn't delivering the full goods.

BBB chief Bill Tindall said a one-man portable photography studio is soliciting in-home portraits (using two different company names), demands full payment for the photo, and then delivers only a small proof.

Customers shouldn't lay out the full amount for the photograph until it's in their hands, although a small deposit isn't unreasonable, Tindall said.

WALLACE
... Hansard tells all

Scott Wallace: Is he B.C.'s most eloquent politician or just the windiest? That all depends on who you talk to about the Conservative leader.

One thing's undeniable. Hansard records show Wallace has talked longer than any other MLA during the current legislative session. Scotty, 45, rolling roundly, burred his way through a whopping 27 hours and 36 minutes of speedily- or more than 10 per cent of all the time taken up debating ministerial estimates.

Wallace took part in every debate save of that on Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt and his longest contribution came during Economic Development Minister Don Phillips' estimates when he talked off and on for three hours and six minutes.

Who says Scotsmen are shy?

Sanich mayor Ed Lum says the municipality is losing out in dealings with the federal and provincial governments because of party politics being practised by council members, whom he refuses to name.

Prime suspect, however, is maverick Ald. John Mika, who often draws verbal blood from his colleagues.

On Tuesday, public works chairman Ald. Sandy Noel accused Mika of playing politics.

Mika, a researcher for the New Democratic Party, retorts: "People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones and Ed Lum should know that better than anyone."

A bottle of French wine for a logo.

That's the offer being made by L'Alliance Francaise de Victoria — the group keeping the language and culture of the fleur-de-lis alive in westernmost Canada.

L'Alliance meets twice monthly for members to listen to lectures, watch films and practice their French with each other.

And the club wants a logo to help advertise its offerings.

Publicity chairman Brenda Cunningham has indicated a design incorporating the club's initials would be especially desirable.

Drawings or sketches can be submitted before Sept. 15 to L'Alliance at Box 5006, Station B, Victoria, V8R 6N3. Best design wins a bottle of wine. (French, of course.)

Bon chance!

An Oak Bay resident, annoyed at the noise of late-night patrons of The Snug cocktail lounge in Oak Bay Beach Hotel, had a new wrinkle to offer in a request to council that the bar close at 11 p.m.

If council could get the hotel to agree with this, wrote Mrs. A. M. Meacham, 102-2708 Satellite, it would benefit not only the neighbors but also the patrons of the lounge "who could get to bed earlier themselves."

She said the noise and nuisance of people leaving late at night "is proving intolerable" to nearby residents.

Council, which has heard this sentiment before, said nothing seems to have worked and noted that it does not have power at present to close the lounge earlier.

ROLLBACK DELAYED

An Anti-Inflation Board order involving wage rollbacks for police officers of Victoria, Esquimalt and Oak Bay municipal forces won't take effect for at least another month, a police spokesman said Thursday.

The AIB agreed to the delay following a meeting with representatives of the three departments on Tuesday.

The AIB ruled last month that 1976 wage settlements for the three departments were too high and had to be rolled back.

The effect has been a requirement that each officer repay the municipalities more than $1,000.

The total value of the rollback is about $180,000.

Pollen Ready To Fight Tory Munro

Two years of political inactivity are enough for Peter Pollen.

The former mayor of Victoria will try to win the nomination from Progressive Conservative MP Donald Munro at the Esquimalt-Saanich riding's nominating convention Sept. 10.

Why Conservative?

"The Liberal government has created the highest level of unemployment for any industrial country in the western world... it has created disunity instead of unity... and it has taken the Western province's for an economic ride."

The Conservative party is the historical alternative, "but it needs a renaissance."

The Progressive Conservative party, "with the emphasis on progressive," is the party Pollen says he has supported federally for the past 12 years.

Pollen says he was asked by a group in the riding to seek the nomination.

When asked for his feelings on Munro, Pollen said: "I think he's a good man. That's all I care to comment. I feel I'm younger, I've had extensive business experience and extensive municipal experience."

Pollen said he could speak for the constituents of Esquimalt-Saanich in "a more vigorous and different manner" than the incumbent.

Munro, who has held the seat for five years, is in England and is not expected back until next week.

When asked his chances of wresting the nomination away from Munro, Pollen said he had no idea; that he'd never gone into sure things.

He said he hoped he'd win, but on a comparison of candidates, not on an emotional loyalty issue.

Pollen said Munro is supported by a "core of Colonel Blimps," but added he didn't know the strength of that support.

He said he was also asked to run for the Liberals, but declined: "Any party that is morally as bankrupt as to ask a man to represent them who's spent more than a year criticizing them must be opposed."

James Ronald Page, formerly of 476 Dupplin, was to have stood trial for possession of a weapon dangerous to the public peace, and assault causing bodily harm to Philip Brennan.

Page's lawyer, Gordon Hayes, of Vancouver said he voluntarily surrendered himself and sought a bail hearing to be held later today.

Missing Accused Turns Up

A 26-year-old Victoria man who failed to appear for his trial Dec. 2, 1975, turned up at the temporary Law Courts at St. Ann's Academy today.

James Ronald Page, formerly of 476 Dupplin, was to have stood trial for possession of a weapon dangerous to the public peace, and assault causing bodily harm to Philip Brennan.

Page's lawyer, Gordon Hayes, of Vancouver said he voluntarily surrendered himself and sought a bail hearing to be held later today.

Miracle Sprouts New Teeth

Miracle, the orphaned killer whale, seems not only to be recovering but is also cutting two new teeth and playing like a child.

Angus Matthews, manager of Sealand of the Pacific which has been handling Miracle's recovery from infected gunshot and propeller wounds, says the whale is beginning to play as if it weren't feeling any pain.

"It's an exciting thing to watch," he said. "She is beginning to show the signs of being a very playful animal and she loves all the attention she's getting."

He said veterinarians attending Miracle were puzzled at first when the one-year-old calf kept sticking its tongue out. Then they discovered it is cutting its last two teeth and is probably suffering from sore gums.

Mair Slams Barber

Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Rafe Mair attacked Victoria MLA Charles Barber today for comments the NDP member made Thursday in criticizing the governments Residential Tenancy Act.

Barber said the bill, which gives the government the power to lift rent controls, would "frighten many people, especially the poor and the elderly."

Mair said that statement is the height of "irresponsibility and bad taste, but, unfortunately, all too typical of the remarks this member makes."

Mair said that "over and over again both in the legislature and out I have stated that rent decontrols will not affect the senior citizen and financially disadvantaged."

Mair stressed again that he cannot foresee the day when rent decontrols would affect low rental units.

"For a public servant to so misrepresent a situation and, under the guise of protecting the poor and disadvantaged in fact caused them great and unnecessary concern, is totally unworthy of any MLA," said Mair.

The minister said that Barber "owes an apology, not only to myself and the government, but particularly to all those people who may have taken his remarks seriously."

SPCA 'Out of Line' Say Rodeo Organizers

A Royal Oak Lions Club official today denied a charge by provincial SPCA director William Leach that rodeos involve deliberate cruelty to animals.

Rip Kirby, who will be in charge of a rodeo Saturday at the Luxton fairgrounds, said Leach apparently has overreacted to the show.

"He's not being fair," Kirby said, "we are not out to be cruel to animals."

Leach has said he will attend the Luxton show, Victoria SPCA manager Don Adams will also be there, he said.

Kirby said Leach was out of line when he claimed that bucking straps are pulled tight around the genital area of horses to make them buck.

"The strap is actually eight inches away and is padded with sheep skin," he said.

He also denied that electric prods used on the animals are painful.

"It startles them," he said. "Cowboys backstage sometimes hit each other with it for fun. It doesn't harm them."

Kirby also noted so far four rodeos have been held on Vancouver Island and there has been no complaints of cruelty.

"It seems to me if a steer or calf could talk it would

Comfort allowances for elderly residents of long-term care facilities will jump by 60 per cent and transportation allowances for handicapped persons attending achievement centres will be doubled.

The rate changes were announced today by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

The new rates will affect about 8,500 elderly residents and 3,600 physically and mentally handicapped persons around the province, and will cost the government an additional $310,000.

Comfort allowances will jump from $25 to $40 per month on Oct. 1 and at the same time travel allowances for handicapped persons going to and from achievement centres will double from $10 to $20 per month.

"Both of these increases recognize the pressure of inflation placed on these people with fixed incomes," said Vander Zalm.

He said the comfort allowance, provided to provincially-subsidized residents in private hospitals and intermediate and extended care facilities, "is an interim increase since the new long-term care program, which becomes effective in January, 1978, will allow residents to keep more of their pensions than the $40 comfort allowance."

Vander Zalm said the rate change was being brought in because "I don't think it fair to let the people wait any longer. They need the money now and even the few dollars for these months will be a help."

The total cost of the comfort allowance rate hike will be about $380,000 through January.

Vander Zalm said the increase in transportation allowance rates is part of an overall program to upgrade services to achievement centres and will cost about $130,000 for the current fiscal year.

Cabaret Licence Lifted

Treating ladies to free jugs of wine has cost the Bacchanalia Club in Esquimalt its liquor licence for nine days.

A spokesman for the Liquor Administration Board said today the suspension, which takes effect at midnight Saturday, comes after Esquimalt police investigated complaints the club was serving free wine to women.

The spokesman said the club had held Ladies Nights Mondays to Wednesdays between 6 p.m. and 9 p.m. Only women were admitted and were given all the wine they could drink. After 9 p.m. the club opened to the public.

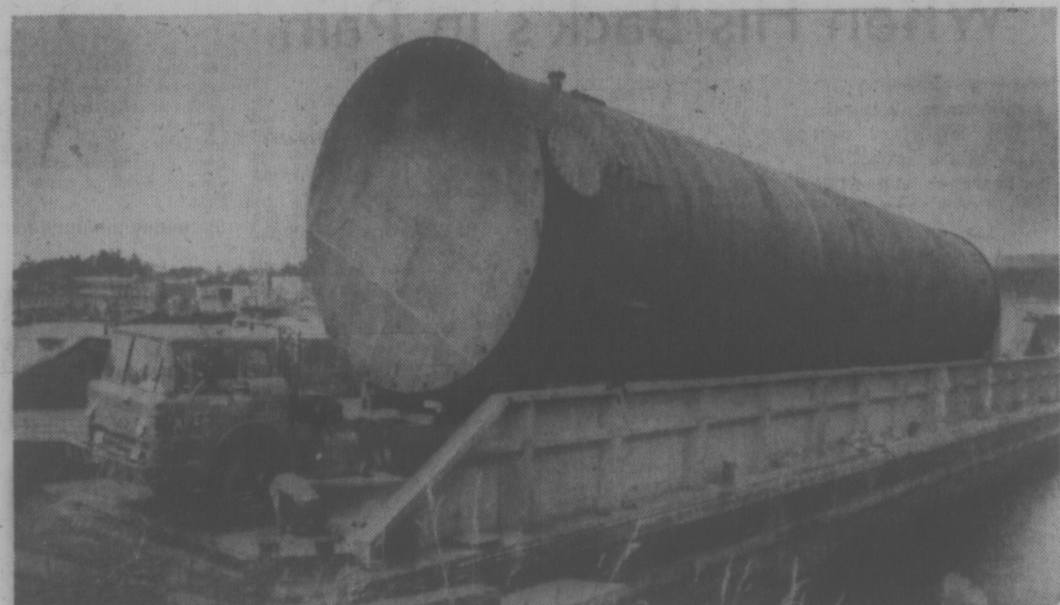

Such treating is a decided no-no, a violation of the regulations which prohibit a vendor to give away liquor, the spokesman said.

The club will be allowed to resume selling liquor on Aug. 29.

ASK THE TIMES

Q. I plan to visit Cathedral Provincial Park, near Kere-mos. Can you tell me what the average temperature is at alpine level? A.B.

A. The average summer temperatures are between eight and 10 degrees Celsius, but daytime temperatures during August can reach as high as 30.

Grundison Claims Third Games Medal

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Two swimmers won their fourth gold medals of the Canada Summer Games Thursday but the accomplishments were overshadowed by a decision that could cost Quebec the over-all Games team title.

Johanna Malloy of Thunder Bay, Ont., won her fourth gold as a member of the Ontario women's 400-metre freestyle relay team which set a Games record of three minutes, 59.62 seconds.

Peter Schmidt of Pointe Claire, Que., earned his fourth gold in the men's 400-metre freestyle, winning in 4:05.09.

Meanwhile, Carole Vanier of Montreal won her second cycling gold in as many days. The 24-year-old university student turned on her speed in the final leg to win the women's road race in one hour, 17 minutes, 28 seconds.

Her two golds played a major role in earning Quebec the cycling team title won by Ontario in 1973.

However, a jury's decision on a protest lodged by Quebec on sailing results last week almost assured Ontario of the over-all team title won by British Columbia in 1973.

The jury said it couldn't rule on the protest because individual sports determine how team standings are arrived at, Quebec said the sailing did not follow the other sports in setting team standings.

The outcome of the protest enabled Ontario to remain the team leader with 100 points after 11 of 16 events while Quebec is second with 94 points.

A decision in favor would have taken 2.5 points from Ontario while awarding Quebec an additional three, leaving Quebec only half a point behind the leader.

The Games end today with Gov.-Gen. Jules Légaré closing the two weeks of sport competitions. Brandon, Man., will be host to the 1979 Winter Games while a yet-to-be-picked Ontario city will stage the 1981 Summer Games.

Garry Trevisol of Sudbury, Ont., won the final cycling gold in the men's 50-kilometre road race. Lido Crema of Vancouver won the silver and Andre Gervais of Montreal the bronze.

In the swim hall, Susan Mason, 17, of Halifax won the gold in the women's 400 freestyle, Jody McPhee, 15, of Sudbury captured the women's 300-metre individual medley. Dan Rogers, 18, of Mississauga, Ont., captured the men's 200 backstroke. Chris Erickson, 18, of Surrey, B.C., won the men's 300-metre medley and Jennifer Boulianne, 14, of Pointe Claire the women's 200 backstroke. It was the second gold for all the swimmers.

Erickson picked up his second gold of the day as member of the victorious B.C. entry in the men's 400-free-style relay along with Stu Ballantyne, 15, of Burnaby with his second gold, Mike Price, 17, of Port Moody and Rob Grandison, 19, of Victoria.

Grundison's medal was his third in the games. He previously won a silver medal when B.C. finished second in the 300-metre relay and won a bronze in the 400-metre medley.

Grundison missed a fourth medal Thursday when he finished fourth in the 200-metre medley.

Another Victorian, Nick Borrelli, finished fifth in the 200 backstroke.

In the diving, Elisabeth MacKay of Sillery, Que., won the women's 10-metre competition with 301.38 points.

Michel Larouche, 18, of Alma, Que., won the men's three-metre event with 455.46 points while his team-mate Gilles Biledeau, 16, of Chicoutimi won the silver and Scott Pearce of Winnipeg the bronze.

Those medals helped Quebec win the diving team title.

Meanwhile, in cycling, Susan Blechschmidt of Victoria was 11th in the women's road race, while Sean and Scott Claxie, also of Victoria, placed 15th and 19th respectively in the men's road race.

The final games in three team sports will be played today for gold, silver and bronze medals.

Defending champion British Columbia will meet Quebec for the soccer gold while Newfoundland will face Ontario for the bronze. B.C. advanced to the final with a 1-0 win over the highly-regarded Newfoundland team on a goal by Doug Wellbourn of Victoria in the 52nd minute mark. Quebec made the final by defeating Ontario 6-3 on penalty kicks.

Quebec and Ontario will meet in the lacrosse final. Quebec defeated B.C. in a playoff game with Bobby Gagne of Sten Fox scoring 3 goals and Daniel Low of Montreal adding a pair of goals. Gary Purdon and Willie Sugriva scored two each for the Burnaby-based B.C. team.

Like Liverpool, Manchester City starts the season with an expensive new signing, having paid Southampton $345,000 for England international striker Mike Channon. But Saturday City will be without one of last season's stalwarts, Brian Kidd, now under suspension.

A new face in the Leicester lineup is midfielder, Eddie Kelly, signed from Queen's Park Rangers during the off-season.

Aston Villa, always within reaching distance of the top last season but unable to mount an effective challenge, have paid out $451,400 for midfielder Ken McNought from Everton and goalkeeper Jimmy Rimmer from Arsenal.

While the gangling, six-foot-four North happily reported that "everything worked out," little seemed to work for the game's more glamorous players.

Jack Nicklaus, complaining of being tired and admitting to a letdown in the wake of the PGA, had to birdie three of his last four holes for a par 71 and said he "was probably fortunate to do that."

Tom Weiskopf, with a triple bogey seven on the eighth hole, and Tom Watson, winner of the Masters and British Opens, also were at 71. Five shots back and trailing more than two dozen players.

Many other top attractions were further back on the tight little course that often produces some of the lowest scores of the tour year.

PHILLIPS SPARKS B.C. TEAM'S WIN

BOISBRIAND, Que. (CP) — Paula Phillips, Valerie White and Marilyn Palmer, all of Vancouver, brought British Columbia the provincial team title at the Canadian women's amateur golf championship Thursday.

Phillips had a two-over-par 73 on the par-73, 6,013-yard Hillside Golf and Country Club course to lead the way in the second round of the event, held simultaneously with the first 36 holes of the individual championship.

White shot a 77 and Palmer had a 78 to give B.C. a total of 467 for the 36 holes and a four-stroke victory over runner-up Ontario, the 1976 champions.

The fourth member of the B.C. team, Vancouver's Gail Harvey Moore, had a 78 Thursday, but only the best three of four scores each day counted toward the title.

B.C. won the championship in 1974 and 1975 and this year marks the 10th time the province has won or shared the provincial title since play began in 1947.

Pinks Bring Good Outlook To Sooke-Pedder Waters

Although wind hampered fishermen Thursday, the prospects for some excellent salmon catches appear bright this weekend in Sooke to Pedder Bay waters.

The main reason for such an optimistic outlook is the arrival of large numbers of pinks in the area.

Many limits of pinks to 10 pounds have included the odd chinook to 30 pounds and coho to seven.

Sooke fishermen have been hitting it lucky just outside Secretary Island trolling strip or minnow with a Hot Spot flasher, one pound of lead and 50 to 60 feet of line.

Strip, minnows and anchovies, trolled with from 50 to 150 feet of line and up to a pound of weight have landed chinooks to 26 pounds along with numerous pinks to nine just about everywhere around Beecher Bay. A few sockeyes and coho, weighing up to nine pounds, were included in the return.

The Pedder Bay strip bed, Race Rocks and waters right in the mouth of Pedder Bay are yielding chinooks to 19 pounds, coho to 10½ and pinks to nine on strip, minnows, anchovies and pink hootchies.

Morning catches have been best.

Many limits of chinooks to 10 pounds, sprinkled with a few coho to 5½, have been taken off Trial Island near Oak Bay. Best success was noted on strip, Stingsildas and Perchins.

Sidney fishermen have had slim pickings recently, with the exception of Moresey Island waters, where they've been hauling small chinooks on strip and minnow at the 150 to 200-foot depth.

On the other hand, fishermen at Deep Cove are enjoying better success after a slack period. Chinooks to 25 pounds and coho to 12 are coming in from about the 60-foot depth on Tom Mack spoons, strip, minnows and blue hootchies. Buzz Bombs and Stingsildas are also starting to produce.

Evening has been the best time to land chinooks to 17 pounds along the Bamberton shore of Saanich Inlet. Most catches have been made on strip or Krippled K spoons with from 150 to 200 feet of wire line and planer.

Numerous chinooks in the five to seven-pound range and some tipping the scales to 15 pounds have been taken in Finlayson Arm. A few coho to seven pounds have also turned up with best success in deep waters on hootchies and strip.

Further up-Island, small chinooks are coming in from the vicinity of Cowichan Bay, Bold Bluff and Tent Island.

"Red hot" returns of coho to eight pounds and chinooks to 26 are reported between Snake and Entrance Islands off Nanaimo. It was hot Monday and Tuesday, dropped off Wednesday and then turned hot again Thursday for trollers using strip or yellow and white flashlights. Buzz-Bombs and Stingsildas are also working.

Some larger chinooks are starting to show off Harmac.

The success rate has died right off at the entrance to Alberni Inlet but some excellent catches of chinooks to 27 pounds were reported off Bates Beach in fairly deep water.

Waters off Hornby and Denman Islands as well as Cape Lazo are yielding some "off and on" coho catches.

At Campbell River, a few fishermen seem to be getting all the fish: northern coho to 12 pounds, numerous pinks to seven, a few sockeye to eight and tye topping 50.

All the usual spots are producing with best success on deep lines using strip, cut-plug herring or Stingsildas. Purple-colored flashlights, bucktails and hootchies are picking up most of the coho.

NIBBLES: Chinooks Club members of the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association are holding their monthly Sunburn Derby from dawn to 2 p.m. Sunday.

Another date to keep in mind is Aug. 28, when the VSLAA holds both the Junior and Sweetheart derbies. A bicycle, donated by The Times, is the top prize for juniors and cash prizes will go to the female fishermen. Both derbies are open to everyone but trophies will go to the members landing the top fish. Tickets are now on sale at all Saanich Inlet boathouses.

Rodney Chow, a junior, captured the July Trophy for the VSLAA with a chinook that tipped the scales at 26.12. R. G. Smith won the men's trophy with a 26.03 pounder and Georgina Campbell was the top fisherwoman with an 18.08 pounder.

Things Not Rosy for Casals

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Open tennis championships were a little like taking a dose of castor oil for Rosie Casals of the United States.

She didn't want to come to Toronto but she knew she had to get some match play outdoors on clay under her belt before the U.S. Open at Forest Hills, N.Y., begins later this month. After spending the summer playing indoors on a fast carpet with Los Angeles Strings of World Team Tennis, her game was rusty.

So it wasn't exactly a surprise to the San Francisco native when she lost 6-4, 7-5 in windy conditions in the women's quarter-finals Thursday to 19-year-old Marise Kruger of South Africa.

Casals, seeded No. 1, double faulted at match point.

"It was a drastic adjustment coming onto slow courts after that fast carpet," Casals said. "I had trouble with my serve and Marise was making good ground strokes."

Although she played her last WTT match Sunday, Casals had two relatively easy victories this week. She eliminated Aussie Helen Cawley 6-2, 6-3 on Wednesday and Thursday morning, the American beat Ilana Kloss, another South African, 6-2, 7-5.

The Casals' defeat stripped the $100,000 tournament of its last female seed. Earlier in the day, the only other surviving seed, No. 8 Yvonne Vermaak of South Africa lost 6-4, 1-6, 6-2 to Cynthia Doerner of Australia.

In other women's quarter-finals, Katja Ebbinghaus, the tall, strong West German who ousted No. 4 seed Evonne Cawley of Australia on Wednesday, lost in three sets to Czech Regina Marsikova, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4.

Today's semi-finals will match Jeanne Evert, Chris's younger sister who defeated Uruguay's Florella Bonicelli, 6-4, 6-2, against Kruger and Doerner against Marsikova.

Meanwhile, top-seeded Raul Ramirez of Mexico advanced another step with a second-round 3-6, 7-5, 6-4 triumph over Jim Delaney of the U.S.

Second-seeded Manuel Orantes of Spain beat Bolivian Ramiro Benavides 6-1, 6-1 in another second-round match, while third-seeded Wojtek Fibak of Poland topped India's Sashi Menon 6-1, 6-3.

Longshot John McEnroe crushed countryman Bill Lofren 6-0, 6-0.

However, Britain's John Lloyd lost 6-3, 6-3 to Colin Dibley of Australia.

The men lost three seeds in second-round play Thursday. No. 3 Corrado Barazzutti of Italy lost 5-7, 6-0, 6-3 to Victor Pecci of Paraguay; No. 10 Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia was beaten 6-7, 6-4, 6-2 by Bob Hewitt of South Africa and No. 16 Bill Scanlon of the U.S. lost 6-1, 7-4 to Andrew Pattison of Rhodesia.

In second-round men's doubles, the third-seeded team of Fibak and Kodes beat Harry Fritz, a former California resident now living in Toronto, and Dale Power of Toronto 6-2, 7-5.

Canucks Play Kings Here

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Canucks will face Los Angeles Kings four times in the National Hockey League.

Sox Get Renko

CHICAGO (UPI) — Chicago White Sox, desperate for some pitching to go with their potent attack as they scramble in the American League West's four-way race, Thursday announced the acquisition of right-handed pitcher Steve Renko from the Chicago Cubs.

The Sox gave up minor league pitcher Larry Anderson.

Good friends are never out of style.

It's a Tight Race

John Robillard is pulling away from the pack in the Vancouver Island hockey stock car racing series, but it's a wild scramble among the rest of the front-runners.

Robillard, from Campbell River, brings his 1988 Firebird to Saturday night's hockey stock car race at Western Speedway with a 360-point margin over second-place George Shillito of Victoria. Shillito was a no-show last weekend at Oyster River Speedway, permitting third-place Don Alexander of Duncan to close within 52 points of him.

Not that Alexander has much breathing room. He's only 50 points ahead of fourth-place Sam Carmie of Black Creek who, in turn, is just 19 points up on Victoria's Al Miller.

Miller had a big night last weekend, breaking the Oyster River track record, finishing third in the last heat and winning the main event.

A mini-demolition derby will also be run as a preview to next Wednesday's full wrecker-on-wrecker show at Western. Saturday's abbreviated program will consist of cat-and-mouse races, heat races in which drivers must crash to pass, and backwards trophy dashes.

Gates open at the usual 6 p.m. with time trials at 7 and racing at 8.

WHALLEY IN FINAL

SURREY, B.C. (CP) — A grand-slam home run by Glen Engevik in the first inning sent Whalley, B.C., on its way to a 5-3 win Thursday over Windsor, Ont., at the Canadian Little League baseball championships.

The win advances host Whalley to the final round today on the double-knock-out tournament against undefeated Lethbridge, Alta. Whalley, which has lost once, would have to defeat the Alberta team twice to win the championship.

Windsor meets Trail, in today's consolation final.

RANGER ROOKIE FACES POSSESSION CHARGE

BRAMPTON, Ont. (CP) — Don Murdoch, a high-wearing rookie with New York Rangers of the National Hockey League last year, has been charged with possession of cocaine.

RCMP Superintendent Donald Heston, in charge of drug enforcement for southern Ontario, said Wednesday that Murdoch, 30, was charged at Toronto International Airport after he had flown to Toronto from the United States on Friday on his way home to Cranbrook, B.C.

About one-fifth of an ounce of the drug was seized, Heston said.

In a 1987 season, Murdoch scored 32 goals and earned 27 assists before an ankle injury in February put him out of action for the rest of the season.

Murdoch is scheduled to appear in provincial court here on Sept. 12.

Sanderson Defends Junior Golf Honors

DUNCAN — Bruce Sanderson of Port Alberni is back to try for a second straight title in the 16th annual Junior National Golf Tournament Saturday at Cowichan Golf Club. Players in the 74-hole event will be competing for both junior and juvenile titles.

Youth Bowling Registration

It's sign-up time for the district's young bowlers.

Registration for Victoria Junior Bowling Association will be held Saturday and again on Aug. 27 at Mayfair Lanes between 9 and 11 a.m. both days.

Registration is open to anyone under 21 years of age. A nominal, $1.50 fee will be required upon registration.

DANDRIDGE SIGNS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bob Dandridge, a six-foot-six forward who played out his option with Milwaukee Bucks last season, has signed a multi-year contract with Washington Bullets of the National Basketball Association. Dandridge ranked among the top 20 in scoring last year.

Ferguson Co-Favorite For B.C. Open Title

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Open, final stop on the 1977 Canadian professional golf tour, begins today at Marine Drive Golf Club, with three B.C. golfers favored to capture the $4,000 first prize.

The three, Dave Barr of Kelowna, Coo Ferguson of Victoria and Doug Rosburgh of Vancouver, will get an early indication of each other's prowess on the 6,078-yard, par-71 layout as they tee off together today in the first round of the 54-hole tournament.

Barr, who is having his best year on the Canadian tour with $12,500 in earnings, says the $20,000 B.C. Open is one of the more important stops on the tour.

Barr has won two tour tournaments this year, including last week's Alberta Open at Calgary where he finished the shot ahead of Greg Fideleki of Toronto. Barr also won the Quebec Open in June.

Ferguson, the defending B.C. Open champion, won as an amateur last year and turned pro during the winter.

He has finished second and eighth on the last two tour stops.

Rosburgh, an amateur, plays out of the Marine Drive course and host pro Vince Baker says he feels Rosburgh has a chance for a good finish because he "knows the course like the back of his hand."

Baker said some of the long-hitting pros could have some trouble with the narrow Marine Drive layout because it demands accuracy.

A total of 158 golfers, including 95 professionals will tee off today. The field will be cut to the low 60 and ties for the final round Sunday.

Mike Ressor, of Seattle, who plays the United States golf tour part time, led the non-exempt qualifiers Tuesday, shooting a six-under par 65.

The tournament will also feature two father-son combinations.

Olympic Winner Boat to Watch U.S. GOLFERS GAIN REVENGE

Royal Victoria Yacht Club will be well represented this weekend when the Seattle Yacht Club holds an international regatta on Lake Washington for six-meters.

Representing the club will be John Graeme's Llanoria and Paul Longridge's Saga in racing that is restricted to six-meters with classic hulls built prior to 1980.

Those in the know are betting that Llanoria will be one of the boats to watch, along with the Vancouver boat Goose, which was built in the 1930s and is regularly crewed by four eager-beaver sailmakers.

Crewing with John will be Dave Richards, Colin Huggert, Nick Thornton and Jack Foster, some of RVYC's top-drawer types.

Built in 1948, Llanoria is the only sailboat ever to make the old Guinness Book of Records. She earned this distinction by achieving a first in winning two Olympics. That was in 1948 and 1952.

Under John's skippering, she's still enjoying a winning streak. At Port Townsend's recent regatta between the American and Canadian six-metre fleets, Llanoria won with two firsts and a third.

AROUND OUR SHORES pat dufour

This was the first time in 10 years that a Canadian boat topped the competition.

Women sailors of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, will be in the driver's seat on Sunday when the squadron holds its annual ladies' skipper's race. Racing begins at 1 p.m. for the J. Saul Trophy, which was won last year by Irene Haines in Lottie.

The RVYC winds up its Wednesday night series racing next week with things getting under way at 6:30 p.m. at Cadboro Bay.

Kim Helwig, Dave Richardson and Dave Teece were the three top Laser sailors this week. Local enthusiasts will be interested to know the all-Canadian boat appears to be almost as popular in British Columbia as it is in North America.

The first thing we saw when we visited the River Dart in Devon recently was a smooth-gliding Laser with the sail number 5521 making her way along the stretch of water below the town of Dartmouth and the Royal Navy's Dartmouth College.

While the Lasers had good sailing at Cadboro Bay on Wednesday evening, the boats were hampered by lack of wind. None of the Cal 20's, designed by Bill Lapworth for the lusty winds of San Francisco Bay, were able to finish within the time limit. Three boats made it around the course in Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet racing. They were Ted Trenholme's Impatience, Soren Isbrandt's Danish Pastry and George Cesarie's Gale.

The RVYC's summer sailing courses for youngsters come to an end on Sept. 2 with 150 between 10 and 15 years of age being taught in the club's Flying Juniors and another 30 learning their skills in Lasers, loaned to the club by the Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific.

This year's senior instructor is Jennifer Charlesworth. The junior instructors are Tom Williams, Kim Helwig and Hart Buck. A family doesn't have to belong to the club to have a youngster take these courses, although a senior club member must sign the application as sponsor.

As in past years, this year's courses were completely filled. So, if you want to get your child involved next summer it's wise to start applying in April.

The courses are all based on Canadian Yachting Association standards, ranging from the basics to spinnaker handling and racing techniques.

SHORT TAKES - Perhaps it's nit-picking, but the company that bought the navy's model of the S.S. Beaver and now runs her on tours of the Inner Harbor could be accused of false advertising when they invite people to try a ride on a "genuine side-wheeler". I've yet to see one of those that has a screw at her stern!

Mitchell-Savage Prove the Best

Guy Mitchell and Dutch Savage outgrappled Mike Sharpe and The Outlaw in the feature bout of a professional wrestling card Thursday night at Memorial Arena.

In other bouts, Mr. Kleen defeated Brown, Eric Froelich defeated Mike London, Gerry Morrow and Paddy Ryan battled to a draw and Eddy Morrow and Joe Palardy were both counted out.

GLENEAGLES, Scotland (AP) — United States captain Billy Casper lost on the last hole to Spain's Severiano Ballesteros, but the American squad opened the Double Diamond World Golf Classic with a 3-1 victory over Europe Thursday.

Casper was defeated by one hole by the European No. 1 but Danny Edwards and former U.S. Open champion Lee Trevino and Jerry Pate were in sparkling form to avenge last year's 4-0 defeat by the Spanish-dominated European team.

Trevino, who last month won the Canadian Open, was the most impressive of the Americans, crushing Belgium's Philippe Toussaint 7 and 6.

Trevino sped to the turn in 32 to go four up and then won the first three inward holes for the biggest victory of the day on the 6613-yard Gleneagles course.

Pate, after holing a 115-footer to birdie the first, was always in command of the European captain Angel Gallardo of Spain. He was up after six and went on to a 4 and 3 victory.

He was quickly followed by Edwards who came in with a 7 and 1 triumph over another Spaniard, Francisco Abreu.

Australian Yacht Faces Elimination

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Enterprise, under skipper Lowell North, scored its first win in the America's Cup defense trials Thursday and then lost a second race to Ted Hood's Independence.

Enterprise won the first race by a minute and two seconds. In the second race, Independence had a two-second jump and increased the margin to 28 seconds at the finish.

Courageous, the 1974 defender, had the day off Thursday and kept her series record at 3-0. Enterprise finished the day at 1-3 and Independence as 1-1.

Sweden's Sverige handed Gretel II her second straight loss, leaving the Australian 12-meter yacht facing a do-or-die situation in the Cup challenger semi-finals in the Sverige. Gretel lost the start by a mere second, passed Gretel II on the first windward leg and gradually expanded her lead through the 24.5-mile race to 2:11 at the finish.

The win gave skipper Pelle Petterson of Sverige a 2-2 record against the old Australian yacht, meaning Gretel II must win the next race in the best-of-seven series or be eliminated from the challenge.

The yacht Australia won a berth in the foreign finals by defeating Baron Marcel Rich's France I by 10:15 Tuesday. That win, the most lopsided of the America's Cup summer, gave Australia a 4-0 sweep of the series.

The winner of the challenger finals earns the right to face one of three American yachts — Enterprise, Courageous or Independence — in the Cup series beginning Sept. 13.

So... You Want to Win a Lottery?

TORONTO (CP) — Winning $1 million in a lottery is wonderful, but dilemmas may abound when it comes time to decide how to handle the money in a sound way.

First, the lucky winner may have to deal with schemers who may try for a stake of the winnings. Then there are the well-intentioned friends with their bright ideas and not-so-bright ideas. Officials of both Ontario Lottery Corp. and Loto Canada urge their winners to be cautious with their new-found wealth and be wary of new friends who want a handout.

Once over that hurdle, the winner faces the confusing problem of how wisely to choose from a bewildering variety of legitimate investments with varying risks. Marshall Pollack, managing director of Ontario Lottery Corp., stresses the prize money is tax-free but the income gained from investing it is taxable, which means the winner should get advice on the soundest investment possible.

Two investment counsellors were interviewed for their advice on what an average family man should do with his $1 million to make the best of the present and the future.

The counsellors gave their prescriptions for a hypothetical winner—a 40-year-old married man who earns $13,000 a year and who has two school-age children.

His major asset is a house worth $80,000 against which there is a $30,000 mortgage. He also owns a four-year-old car and has a $2,000 bank loan.

William Buik, president of Fry Burns Investment Management Ltd., suggested that the winner should start by setting aside $100,000 for the replacement of the four-year-old car, the purchase of a second car and improving his house as well as repayment of the mortgage and the bank loan. His will and life insurance programs should also be reviewed.

To minimize his tax liabilities, the winner should review his tax position with a professional consultant and examine the possibilities of income-splitting and other transfers of assets within the family.

Bulk said the winner's investment portfolio should be composed of liquid assets such as stocks, bonds and cash equivalents—short-term notes and deposits, which can easily be translated into either cash or some other investment.

He said $100,000 should be placed in some Canadian provincial government obligation in United States funds which would provide protection against deterioration in the Canadian dollar. A sum of $200,000 should be invested in Canadian long-term provincial or corporate bonds. In future, part of this money could be used for an income-producing real estate investment.

He recommended a large bulk of money be invested in relatively high-yielding Canadian common stocks.

Everett Fleming, manager of the investment management department of A. E. Ames and Co. Ltd., recommended the winner set aside $50,000 for a trip, car or furniture and then invest a third of the remainder in real property, a third in a bond portfolio with an assortment of maturities and a third in high-grade common stock.

He suggested that the winner buy a bigger house and a farm, summer cottage or small income-yielding property such as an apartment building.

"This way the winner could tangibly enjoy his wealth as well as making a good investment which will be protection against inflation," he said.

"Although investments in common stock are viewed somewhat skeptically these days because of market conditions, they're a good bet in the long run," he said. Despite bad times, the dividend stream does continue to rise over a long period of time.

SLASHING CEREMONY

POMONA, N.J. (AP) — It wasn't a typical opening day ribbon cutting ceremony at Transair '77, a five-day transportation exhibition and air show.

Stunt pilot Art Schell, flying a de Havilland Chipmunk at 110 miles per hour, performed the honors by barnstorming his small propeller craft upside down 10 feet above the runway and flying through the sails.

"The flight was a piece of cake," said Schell, 43. The Hollywood stunt pilot says he does about 120 ribbon cuttings a year.

Rhodes Deadline Oct. 25

University students have up to Oct. 25 to file applications for 11 Rhodes scholarships to be awarded to Canadians this fall.

No written examinations are required. Selections are made by a provincial committee — after interviews — on the basis of the records of the candidates.

The awards entitle winners to study at Oxford University in England for two and possibly three years starting September, 1978.

Application forms can be obtained from university registrars or from the Rhodes Scholarship Trust secretary each province. The B.C. secretary and address is Sholto Heberton, 1830-505 Burrard Street, Vancouver.

Woman Drowns

NANAIMO (CP) — Mavis Harper, 51, of Lantzville, drowned Wednesday after she collapsed off Lantzville Beach, an autopsy revealed Thursday.

An inquiry has been ordered by Dr. D. L. Shea.

uty education minister, told a meeting Wednesday.

Hardwick, speaking to the sixth annual conference of the Canadian Association of Business Education Teachers, said the rising costs of machinery operation and complicated equipment should lead to changes in future economic activity.

"There will be a greater opportunity for skilled workers," he said. "We in B.C. are going to look at new areas of skills."

Hardwick stressed the importance of teaching marketable skills to students at the high school level and commended business teachers for their role in this area.

"There is a need for expanding education in business. Programs in colleges and universities don't meet their students' needs," he said, noting many new business programs are modelled on American programs which do not correspond to B.C.'s situation.

"We don't have the complex markets like that," said Hardwick.

"We should teach skills appropriate to the scale of operations in the province. Many of these programs are aimed at the metropolitan, urban scene. We must take into account the scale that exists."

Earlier Wednesday, Bob Moore, B.C. Government Employees Union education officer, delivered an address by Art Kube, Canadian Labor Congress Regional Education director.

Moore, using Kube's written speech as an outline, said workers should have opportunities to further their education, both in union jobs and in academic areas.

He said unions should negotiate paid education leaves.

"When the desire to learn is aroused they (workers) must be helped financially," Moore said.

He said this should apply to all types of learning, from upgrading secretarial skills to earning a bachelor's degree in philosophy.

'New Democracy' for Bolivia But No Election Until 1980

LA PAZ (AP) — Despite calls from civilian political figures for elections next year, Bolivian President Hugo Banzer says he will not alter his plan for elections in 1980.

Even then, Banzer said, he will present a new kind of government different from formal democracy. The leading candidate for the presidency in any election is thought to be Banzer, whose military junta has been in power six years.

The 31-year-old president has not made clear what kind of government he envisions, except to say it will be pluralistic and will not be a return to the "false democracy" of old.

"We aspire to create a new democracy, with the real participation of the peasants, of the workers, who until now have been silent witnesses to the political drama of the groups that contended for power," Banzer said in a recent speech.

He rejected calls for early elections and a return of political activity by saying politicians have debased formal democracy here.

"Where are the reforms that so many promised during elections and that once in power disappeared?" he asked. "Why do they now pretend to demand that everything be accomplished at once when very little or nothing was done during long years?"

Human rights violations exist in Bolivia only in the "feverish imagination" of journalists, he added.

Banzer said the military would prefer not to govern but has to rule because of immense development tasks facing Bolivia. Roughly two-thirds of the population lives at subsistence levels.

Banzer stressed further development of the country's dominant tin industry, oil and natural gas exploration and production, and improved transportation facilities.

He also has another goal for his regime in this decade: returning to the sea. Bolivia lost its small coastline to Chile in an 1879 war, and Banzer is mounting a major effort to gain a new sea outlet across Chile's northern edge.

Luis Adolfo Siles, the last constitutional president of Bolivia, is the leading figure calling for an immediate return to political liberty and elections next May. Siles is also head of a new Roman Catholic-Protestant group organized to keep watch on Bolivian human rights.

The government acknowledges it has about 75 political prisoners. Most top leaders of the left-of-centre movement of the National Revolution, which governed Bolivia for 12 years before a 1964 military coup, are in exile.

Siles, a lawyer, was elected vice-president in 1966, the last time elections were held in Bolivia. When President Rene Barrientos died in a helicopter crash in 1969, Siles succeeded him but was ousted by the military before the end of the year.

A military power switch the following year brought Gen. Juan Jose Torres, a leftist, to power. He was overthrown in August, 1974, by Banzer's rightist forces.

At first, Banzer governed with the help of the Movement of National Revolution and the rightist Falange, but he expelled them from his cabinet in 1974 after an attempt to depose him. Political parties now are "in recess."

Music-Psychology Link Under Study

WATERLOO, Ont. (CP) — How do jazz musicians or classical composers create music? What is the relationship between music theory and the way people perceive musical sounds? Why do some react more strongly to music than others?

Dr. Annabel Cohen, an assistant professor at University of Waterloo psychology department, is asking these questions, bringing music and psychology together in an attempt to find out what the connections are between them.

"Both music and psychology involve the mind," she said. "The role of the mind is probably more obvious in the field of psychology than in the field of music, but consider where music would be without the minds of composers, performers or, for that matter, listeners. One of our interests is to find out how the listener's mind works... how music is perceived."

"This involves finding out more about how people recognize musical patterns. As we all know, lots of people who say they don't know anything about music can recognize hundreds of tunes. Recognizing a tune means, essentially, recognizing a pattern. The thing is, though, we don't know quite how we do it."

Dr. Cohen said people are apt to take pattern-recognition behavior for granted until they try to teach a computer to do it. "One of the reasons we can't teach them to recognize complex patterns is that we don't quite know how we do it ourselves."

Computers are used by modern composers and in psychological experiments in hearing. Dr. Cohen said "the computer provides an interesting perspective from which to examine how people create, analyze and recognize musical patterns."

"Finally, the new music being made possible by the computer as a musical instrument is challenging both traditional music theory and psychological theory."

Computers make experimental research possible on the relation between music and the mind. Dr. Cohen uses one to manipulate musical sounds, then studies her subjects' reactions to the sounds.

"We can ask our subjects to perceive differences in sounds, or to respond as quickly as possible to a sound, or to rate the beauty of a particular passage or whatever we want. We start with some theory based in part upon psychology or music or intuition but this is often modified as a result of the subjects' responses."

'Nothing Naughty About Selling Arms to the Arabs'

PARIS (Reuters) — The French became enthusiastic arms salesmen to Arab countries when the late Gen. Charles de Gaulle decided that, through sales of military equipment, he could recapture influence with the Arabs that France lost during the Algerian war.

The policy was pursued by his successor, the late President Georges Pompidou, who was responsible for a controversial sale of 110 Mirage jets to Libya.

And President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, faced with an economic crisis when oil prices soared after the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, plunged into swapping sophisticated weapons for oil.

The French replaced part of the arms Egypt lost in that war and gained major footholds in Iraq and Syria with sales of Mirage fighter-bombers, helicopters, tanks and missiles.

For some 20 years Egypt, Syria and Iraq depended mainly on the Soviet Union for arms. But after Moscow refused to supply Cairo with new arms and spare parts, President Anwar Sadat turned to France.

Syria and Iraq have not been refused by the Soviet Union, but they decided to diversify their arms purchases and are turning to France.

Iraqi Vice-President Saddam Hussein, who will visit France later this year, is negotiating the purchase of 72 Mirage F-1 combat aircraft. He is also seeking nuclear power plants and other French industrial equipment, according to officials here.

Despite foreign pressure, especially from President Jimmy Carter, to reduce the lucrative arms trade, France has clinched deals with most Arab countries.

"There is nothing naughty about selling arms to the oil-rich Arab countries," said one of Giscard's aides. "They must defend their newly acquired wealth, and what we have been saying for the last 10 to 15 years still holds good. If we don't sell, others will."

By helping Arabs build up their armed forces, Giscard has won the confidence of Arab leaders. But he has tried to convince them of the need to recognize Israel's right to secure and internationally guaranteed borders.

He has also tried to convince France's Common Market partners and the United States that the Palestinian people need a homeland as part of an over-all Middle East settlement.

The French call for a Palestinian homeland falls short of Arab claims for a state, but the French believe this is a matter for negotiation between Arabs and Israelis at the Geneva peace conference, expected to resume before the Giscard has visited several Arab capitals, including Cairo, Riyadh, Algiers, Rabat and Tunis. He sent Prime Minister Raymond Barre to Baghdad in June and there are plans for him to visit Damascus in October. Besides arms, the French have launched a major drive to sell nuclear power plants in the Middle East.

While backing efforts to prevent proliferation of atomic weapons, Giscard shows no inclination to change his nuclear policy as a result of Carter's decision to curtail use of plutonium, a key component of nuclear bombs. France has developed a new uranium enriching system the government claims makes it secure against use in nuclear bombs. But it is not yet developed enough for commercial use.

Egypt, Iraq, Morocco, Libya and other Arab countries are pressing France to help them build nuclear power plants, officials said.

CHAIN-MAIL protection is afforded meat cutters at Kitchener, Ont., plant of J. M. Schnieder Inc. Chain-mail apron and gloves are imported from France.

B.C. Outdoors Magazine Sold

VANCOUVER (CP) — Interpress Publications Ltd., of Vancouver, has purchased B.C. Outdoors magazine for "over $300,000."

The magazine has a current circulation of 31,800. This is expected to be hiked to more than 37,000 with the acquisition of the paid circulation list of Western Angling Magazine, which went out of business last year.

Gerald Kidd, Interpress president, said B.C. Outdoors will become a monthly magazine in February, 1978. It is presently a bi-monthly.

Arthur Downs, owner of the magazine until he sold it to Interpress, recently stepped down as president of the B.C. Fish and Wildlife Federation.

City Considering Spinal Checks family

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

The Greater Victoria school board is considering screening adolescent children's spines in a program that could reduce the number of serious back problems in later life.

The would-be target of the screening is scoliosis — a spinal abnormality that manifests itself in children (usually female between the ages of 10 and 13).

According to a recent medical journal, scoliosis is often not detected until it has reached a point where the growing girl's clothes hang unevenly, by which time prolonged orthopedic measures are needed.

Untreated, scoliosis can progress to become a crippling and life-shortening disability.

But a simple test can easily detect the beginning of spinal curvature, and as in the case of most illnesses, early diagnosis generally means simpler and shorter treatment.

Dr. Bruce Howe, chairman of the physical education department at the University of Victoria, offered to help the school district by supplying specially-trained physical education students to do the screening.

All that would be required from the school district would be transportation to the schools for his students, he said.

School trustees at a recent board meeting referred the screening idea to the regional public health officer for comment.

Oddly enough, the only trustee who opposed the idea right from the beginning is Dr. Mark Fisher, a family practitioner.

Dr. Fisher expressed fears that the district might be liable if an improperly trained UVic student missed a case of scoliosis.

He also wondered about adolescent girls having to strip for examination by non-professionals.

But Dr. Harold Carter, an orthopedic surgeon and the only scoliosis specialist in Victoria, thinks the screening is an excellent idea and he said he feels Dr. Fisher's reservations are unfounded.

Dr. Carter said he would be willing to lend his expertise to help train the UVic students for the screening.

He said the girls do not have to be stripped. The back has to be examined visually, but the patient wears pants and can hold a towel in front of her, wear a gown open at the back, or even wear a halter top, he said.

The UVic screeners simply make a visual examination — usually by having the patient bend over at the waist to see if one side of the rib cage rises higher than the other.

If the screener suspects a possible abnormality, he recommends the patient go to her family doctor or to a specialist for further examination.

The tendency is for too many referrals, but there's no harm in that, Dr. Carter said in a recent interview. "At worst, the individual has to have a back x-ray."

And the advantage of early diagnosis for the real cases far outweighs any disadvantages, he added.

Many school boards in Canada and the U.S. have already embarked on scoliosis screening in schools.

One recent result was written up in the Canadian Journal of Public Health by Dr. Edwin Abbott, medical health officer for the Scarborough, Ont., board of health.

His staff screened 19,000 children aged 11 to 14 and referred 657 of them to a physician.

Follow-up figures weren't completed, but at the time of his article, 10 had been fitted with braces, eight more were considering them, five underwent corrective surgery and 39 were put on an exercise program.

Many others were being watched to see if the condition worsened or if it had peaked and did not require corrective measures.

Among other conclusions, Dr. Abbott writes: "We consider it has been a worthwhile procedure and we would recommend it to other health departments."

"We have no doubt that this should be an integral part of our annual assessment of school children."

"We can speculate that the benefits more than justify the costs, and in the long run, save the health care system a great deal of money."

Scoliosis is nothing new. The term was first used by Hippocrates. Its cause is unknown and it affects girls on a ratio of 9 to 1 compared with boys. Between 1 and 2 per cent of the 10 to 14 age group can expect to be affected by the disease.

Severity ranges from undesirable appearance that looks like poor posture, through chronic back pain to an encroaching deformity that causes breathing impairment with possible cardiac complications.

Treatment in adults takes longer and gives less satisfactory results.

You Don't Need Electronics Course to Buy a Stereo Set

By LYNNE GORDON

The amount of money that can be spent on a stereo system is virtually limitless, but most budgets do have limits so it's best to do a bit of checking before investing $150 or $15,000. Buying a stereo can be a confusing proposition, but don't be frightened off by the technical terms or the number of brand names on the market. There are a few tips to keep in mind before you buy, and you don't need a course in electronics to get quality for your money.

Audio authorities say that a basic sound system of fairly high quality can be assembled for about $500 or $600. Once you've decided how much you want to spend above or below this amount, consider the type of stereo available — a console, compact or component system. A console is a complete unit housed in a cabinet with speakers, turntable, amplifier and radio tuner. With a console, you are not only getting a stereo, but a piece of furniture — but there may be disadvantages. You can't change the placement of the speakers; they are permanently set and immovable. For the real stereo buff, this may be a drawback.

A compact system has the turntable, amplifier and tuner in one unit, with the speakers housed separately. It's portable, and allows you to position the speakers anywhere you like.

The basic component system includes three separate units — the amplifier, turntable, and a pair of speakers. Since you can buy each piece separately, you have the widest choice of power and features and a limitless range of products and prices. But buying a component system may be tricky simply because of the seemingly limitless possibilities.

One way to combat this confusion is to buy package deals

caveat emptor

assembled by the dealer. Some stores offer a discount when you buy assembled packages, and this may be cheaper in the long run compared with buying each piece separately, at different times and at different stores. But

Feast To Lure Lost Boa

DETROIT (AP) — Michael Lakeman is setting out a feast of 10 baby chicks and one large rat in hopes of luring home his runaway pet.

The pet with the big appetite is a six-foot boa constrictor, which vanished from Lakeman's home on the city's far east side Tuesday night. Ever since, Lakeman and his nervous neighbors have been trying to track down the critter.

Although Lakeman has assured his friends the snake could do them little harm, some were understandably apprehensive when he passed around a circular reading, "Lost, lost, lost... six foot boa... dangerous... do not handle."

He said he included the word "dangerous" to make certain no one would touch the snake and possibly get bitten.

Lakeman said although the boa is used to a weekly feast of the chickens and rat — it could go five weeks without food if necessary.

you may run into a situation where you like the turntable and amplifier, but feel the speakers, for instance, are poor quality. You may be able to select pieces from different manufacturers and still get a package price if all three are purchased at the same time.

As you may have guessed, different stores will have different prices on similar equipment. Knowing the type of stereo you want is the first step — the next move takes some pavement pounding and hard listening. Every expert I talked with suggested taking a record with you in order to test the systems.

Compare the sound of the different types in your price range. Greg Creed, a dealer, told me that you should be able to distinguish the different tones — the highs, like cymbals, the mid-range tones like a piano, and the low tones, like drums. Some speakers will perform better at the high or low end, and although some people prefer this sound, others want separate tonal distinctions.

Once you've decided on the type of stereo or the kinds of components that sound best within your price range, get the model number of the piece or pieces, try different stores and find the dealer with the best price. You can often haggle, and salesmen have been known to slash prices within a certain margin.

And what about the technical terms — distortion percentages, input sensitivity and wow and flutter? Creed told me that you don't necessarily have to memorize each definition before you step out on the market, but a little bit of knowledge gleaned from stereo and consumer magazines never hurts. Remember, your ears should determine what you buy. And as Greg Creed suggests — "shop around, shop around, and then shop around some more."

Common Cents

By KATE MACQUEEN

Proud of your collection of perfumes and colognes?

Well, don't open all of them at once. Use up one bottle at a time. For once the bottle's opened, the scent begins to evaporate and lose its potency. Don't display your collection in a place where there are extremes of heat and cold. Temperature changes can affect the ingredients in your pretty bottles.

Disposable shavers come in "his" and "hers." There's quite a price difference, too. "He" pays only about 50-cents for two dull black shavers. "She" pays almost $1 for two pretty pastel shavers. When both sets of shavers do the same thing, why worry about the color? After all, both types are throw-aways, so why throw away the cash?

If your shoe polish supply is limited to black and brown but you want to polish tan shoes, have a banana — or dig a banana skin out of the kitchen waste basket. Rub the smooth leather with the inside of the skin. Then carefully wipe away the sticky coating. Polish the leather with a dry cloth. The tannic acid and coloring in the banana skin will give a great, soft shine to your tans!

People Viewing A Fashion Joy

By BERNADINE MORRIS
New York Times

PARIS—People watching is one of the joys of the couture shows. Since the shows invariably run a half-hour late, there's plenty of time for the puntual to indulge in the sport. Givenchy is the only couturier who makes an effort at starting close to post time and he's usually thwarted by a mass of late-comers.

The character of each collection can be read from the nature of the viewers. The people from the press are usually the same — they're doomed to go around to all the shows. But the private customers naturally pick the collections that reflect their taste.

Take Chanel. Establishment clothes attract establishment people. Eve Barre, wife of Raymond Barre, the French premier, was the ranking member of officialdom present at her show.

Claude Pompidou was also there, applauding politely in white gloves. Gloves are rare these days, even on establishment figures. Jacqueline Auriol, whose father was premier, Alice Saunier-Seïte, who is the State Secretary for Universities and several titled women (the Countess Alice de Chavagnac and Isabelle de Lantier du Saillant) added to the tone of the gathering.

Yves Saint Laurent attracts swingers, such as Paloma Picasso, Catherine Deneuve and Zizi Jeanmaire, while Christian Dior occupies a place somewhere between the two. His rooms are filled with serious purchasers who like serious clothes with a little zest. They included the American Mildred Wilson, Deeda Blair and Estee Lauder. Dior fans usually turn up at the Givenchy, too.

The ranking member of all the shows was Catherine Bokassa, whose husband, Jean-Bedel Bokassa, is an emperor. He's ordering his throne and the robes in France for his coronation, Dec. 4, in the Central African Empire.

There aren't many empresses around much any more. Empress Bokassa wore a green tulle dress to the Lanvin show, which was pretty fancy afternoon dressing.

The gaudy of the showings was Bianca Jagger, who turned up at Dior, Saint Laurent and, unexpectedly, at Mme. Gres, who is almost as established as Chanel. Mrs. Jagger usually wears a white pants suit or a white trench coat, but she promised to change her style after seeing the shows. She said she liked all the feminine, beautiful things.

The presence of the wife of a rock star buoyed the couture people, who must attract younger women if they are to survive. So Linda Johnson, the 19-year-old daughter of the publisher of Ebony magazine in Chicago, was eagerly welcomed. Besides being young, she had style.

After sitting through the couture shows and ordering their fall clothes, couturiers went out to decorate the Paris evening scene.

Two of the first fall dresses to get a public airing were the black crepe style with the leopard belt and the one-shoulder leopard printed style by Jean-Louis Scherrer. They showed up on Pat Kennedy Lawford and Isabel d'Ornano respectively, at the Elysee Matignon the same night as his showing. The private club with the sequined curtains is becoming the new Regine's for the fashion crowd.

Estee Lauder and the countess Bruno de Boisgelin, the former Carmen Rodriguez, both wore the same red-flowered chiffon dress from Dior's spring collection that evening. Those things happen. Lynn Wyatt of Houston, another couture enthusiast, wore a white dress by Mary McFadden. "I felt like an American tonight," Mrs. Wyatt said in her soft Texas drawl.

Deeda Blair, who went to Chanel in the obligatory Chanel suit, attended the Saint Laurent collection twice. "The first time, I felt wiped out—it was a wild theatrical experience, but I didn't need any more costumes. Then I went back and saw it again and found many things to try on. The soft, jersey dresses felt magical. I'm glad I went."

Clothing Hike Not So Severe

TORONTO (CP) — Children's clothes for back-to-school wear have not increased as much in price this year as last year, says Jamie Burton, general merchandise manager for Simpsons stores.

"Last year back-to-school clothes went up an average 10 per cent, some even as high as 15 per cent," he said, "but this fall the increases are five to eight per cent."

Burton said that the children's market "is very good about keeping prices down."

"The people involved are conscious of customers wanting the best value for their dollar."

Havis Cherry, manager of the girls' department at the Bay in Toronto said that the trend in back-to-school clothing this year "is for more dressing up."

"Mothers want their five-year-old starting school to wear a dress or jumper rather than pants," she said. "I guess they want them to look like little girls. They can play in pants after school."

For little boys, the newest look is the combination of vest and slacks, says Selwa Shaker, designer for Jon Jon, a manufacturing firm for boys' wear.

Husband-Wife Families Drop

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Fewer births, later marriages, frequent divorces and higher incomes have resulted in more than half the households in the United States consisting of one or two persons, the Census Bureau said this week.

A census statement said the husband-wife family continued to dominate in 1976, although the number has declined rapidly in the past six years.

It also said single-family ownership is still the achievable goal of most families despite the sharp rise in home prices in the 1970s. The price of the average home is now more than $30,000.

In fact, the percentage of young home-owners increased between 1970 and 1976 when there was recession, massive unemployment and the fastest peacetime rise in home prices. While only half of the couples, under age 35 owned their homes in 1970, 57 per cent were homeowners last year.

The new data on living patterns was contained in the latest census report "Household and Family Characteristics: March 1976."

Census said 20.6 per cent of all households surveyed consisted of one person, an increase of 1 per cent in a year. Two-person families lived in 30.6 of all households, unchanged from 1975 and slightly lower than 1974.

"Low fertility, postponement of marriage... the ability of young singles and the elderly to finance and maintain (a household)... and marital dissolution are all contributors to the increase," the report said. The number of persons living alone more than doubled from 1960 while the number of couples without children increased 50 per cent.

Despite more frequent divorce and later marriage, nearly two-thirds of all households consist of married couples, census reported. This compared with 71 per cent six years earlier.

In the past 15 years, the number of U.S. households has increased by 20.1 million. Most of this growth is concentrated among persons living alone and childless couples.

23-Ounce Baby Home

HAMILTON (CP) — Adam David, Sienna, who weighed only one pound, seven ounces at birth on March 23, now is at home with his parents and weighs a more substantial six pounds, five ounces.

Louis and Judy Sienna brought the baby home from hospital last week.

Judy said she can hardly keep away from her tiny son, and sometimes has to restrain herself from picking him up and squeezing him to prove he is really there.

During the first five months after birth, she did not know if Adam would make it.

At McMaster University Medical Centre, Adam endured pneumonia, jaundice, mild seizures, oxygen treatments, blood exchanges, intravenous feedings, life in an incubator and sessions of a respirator.

Judy gave birth to her first child after a pregnancy of five months and three weeks. The 24-year-old mother does not know why Adam was born early.

Extended treatments with pure oxygen have damaged Adam's delicate lung tissues, she said. Doctors didn't want to lessen the dosage in case a deficit of oxygen caused brain damage.

"They (doctors) tell me it will take about eight years to replace the damaged tissues, and he has to take drugs to combat muscle seizures."

'Millions' to Lansky, Vesco

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI)

Reputed underworld moneyman Meyer Lansky and fugitive financier Robert L. Vesco are paired with multimillion dollar amounts in ledgers confiscated this week from a Rhode Island-based international drug smuggling ring, a newspaper and a television station reported today.

The men's last names were listed in ledgers along with amounts "in the millions of dollars," according to reports in the Providence Journal and on station WJAR-TV.

The money was "front money" used to finance an operation involving more than 200 drug dealers operating in three foreign countries and 18 states, primarily on the U.S. east coast, according to the newspaper account.

Federal officials have long considered Lansky a major source of money for organized crime. Vesco is presumed in Costa Rica where he fled after being charged with embezzlement and making illegal contributions to Richard Nixon's 1972 presidential campaign.

The ledgers were confiscated by local, state and federal officials in a series of raids this week that netted nearly $400,000 in cash and 5½ tons of marijuana worth an estimated $9 million.

Warwick Police chief John F. Couteur indicated "major international organized crime figures" were listed in the records and said their names were well known.

Florida law officials have informed Rhode Island police they may have stumbled on "the bones of the marijuana trade into the United States," according to newspaper reports.

NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR CHANGE OF NAME

NOTICE is hereby given that an application will be made to the Director of Vital Statistics for a change of name, pursuant to the provisions of the "Change of Name Act," by me - Suet-Ying Leung of No. 307-345 Michigan St. Victoria, B.C. in Victoria, in the Province of British Columbia. To change my name from Suet-Ying Leung to Ronnie Suet-Ying Leung.
 Dated this 17th day of August, A.D. 1977.

Ronnie Suet-Ying Leung

day and Wednesday were from Florida.

"If there's a bigger drug ring operating in this country, I'd be surprised," a Florida official was quoted as saying. He also said the drug ring operates in Colombia, Jamaica and Mexico and has been the subject of a three-year investigation.

U.S. and Rhode Island officials have said the confiscated records indicate the marijuana was "Colombian Gold" shipped from South America on the rusty Jamaican fishing ship Dorchester which mysteriously sailed into Narragansett Bay two weeks ago without a captain or any fishing equipment.

The crew first claimed to be penniless but then paid off $4,300 worth of fines and fuel bills with crisp $50 and $100 bills.

Blue Jeans Smuggling Ring Cracked

BASEL, Switzerland (AP) — Police said Thursday they have cracked an international ring importing phony Levi blue jeans from the Far East to sell in Europe.

Swiss and Dutch police said they seized 22,000 pairs of jeans, all bearing forged labels of the Levi Strauss Co., the world's best-known manufacturer. They estimated the shipment's value at $800,000, or about $15 a pair.

The seizure was the most damaging strike yet against a huge European trade in denim sold under the counterfeit trade names of top U.S. brands, police said.

They said four foreigners were arrested here and charged with attempted fraud in connection with a plan to ship 30,000 pairs of jeans from Basel to West Germany. The suspects, a West German, a Dutchman, an Italian and a Briton, have been freed on $4,000 bail each. Their names were not released.

A Basel police official said the seized jeans were manufactured in Taiwan and carried forged Levi labels.

Police said interrogation of the Dutch suspect led to the seizure of 22,000 additional fake Levi's in an Amsterdam warehouse. Dutch police said those jeans appeared to have been manufactured in South Korea and were bound for Eastern Europe.

Lasagne said the investigation, which was prompted by a criminal complaint filed by Levi Strauss Co., was still under way.

Both Levi Strauss and Blue Bell, Inc., maker of Wrangler-label denims, have sent investigators to Europe to trace supply and distribution routes of the imitations, which are marketed at cut-rate prices.

West Germany, whose $900-million denim market is the biggest in Europe, was a chief target.

Steelworker Vote Probed

OTTAWA (UPI) — Quebec attorney Roland Tremblay has been appointed by the federal Labor Department to conduct an inquiry into the February election of Canadian union executives for the United Steelworkers of America.

Labor Minister John Munro said Thursday the appointment of an inquiry commission was made at the "specific request" of the Canadian director of the USWA, E. G. Docquier.

TOILET PRODUCES NUCLEAR GURGLES

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (UPI)

— The nuclear reactor at the University of Florida has a problem — the cooling system malfunctions when someone flushes the bathroom toilet.

"Please don't flush the toilet while the reactor is running," reads the sign on the building's lavatory door.

A spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission said no safety violation is involved.

The reactor has a powerful water-fed cooling system fed by a well for risky experiments. But low-risk experiments run on a secondary cooling system tied in by a city water main to the toilet.

Untimely flushes have caused the reactor to be shut down five times in the past three years.

Violence At Polls In U.K.

BIRMINGHAM, England (Reuters) — The violent Lady-worship election ended in fist-fighting today and a badly needed victory for the Labor government.

As the result was announced at Birmingham Town Hall, Socialist candidate Faghib Ahsan struck National Front candidate Anthony Reed-Herbert, whose right-wing, anti-immigrant party came third in the voting.

Scuffling broke out as Ahsan was hauled struggling from the vote-counting room by two policemen. Four persons were arrested.

Ahsan said he was attacked first by National Front members and was defending himself when he hit Reed-Herbert.

Street fighting and an atmosphere of violence and bitterness marred the election campaign in a rundown area of industrial Birmingham.

Labor candidate John Sever held the seat, but Labor's big majority in the 1974 general election was cut by two-thirds. However, only nine per cent of the lost vote went to the Conservatives, compared with an average of 20 per cent in other recent by-elections.

As a result, Prices Secretary Roy Hattersley said the Labor party is favored to win a general election.

Search For Will Dropped

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Superior Court judge has ordered an end to the worldwide search for the will of industrialist Howard Hughes, saying all reasonable leads have been exhausted.

Judge Neil Lake said Thursday that there was no reason to continue the search, initiated shortly after the multimillionaire aviation pioneer and industrialist died in April, 1976.

If no valid will is found, the U.S. Internal Revenue Service can claim 77 per cent of the estate, estimated to be worth anywhere between $168 million and $1 billion. Another part of the estate might go to Texas if the estate is handled there. Hughes' relatives have an agreement about division of the balance.

Although a trial is still pending on the validity of the so-called Mormon will, its validity has been widely questioned.

Lawyers representing special administrator Richard Gano reported to the court March 9 and again July 13 that interviews with hundreds of persons, contacts with 144 banks in four countries and reviews of thousands of documents have failed to turn up a will.

Gano, Hughes' 61-year-old cousin, was appointed April 14, 1976, to administer the eccentric recluse's California holdings. He has filed a report on progress of the search, but asked the court last month to decide whether any more funds from the estate should be spent searching.

Judge Lake ruled Thursday against sifting through 5,000 files belonging to former Hughes lawyer Gregson Bautzer, a task Gano said would have taken 10 weeks and cost about $17,000. The work was suggested because some of Bautzer's former employees had said they recalled seeing a Hughes will, although Bautzer denies its existence.

HEAT WAVE

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Temperatures at an Australian scientific station in Antarctica early this month soared above freezing for the first time in recorded history. Engineer T.J. Petry said the heat wave peaked Aug. 2 when scientists at the Mawson station recorded a temperature of six degrees Celsius. The normal temperature at the base, on the Antarctic Circle, is between 25 below and 30 below zero this time of year.

ELVIS MORBID?

A book based on 200 hours of taped interviews with three bodyguards fired by Elvis Presley claims the rock and roll star took a variety of drugs, hoarded firearms, thought he was a prophet, was morbidly fascinated with corpses and tried to put out a contract on the man he thought stole his wife, Priscilla.

The allegations are contained in Elvis: What Happened? by National Star reporter Steve Dunleavy. The book was published Aug. 1 with little fanfare and a press run of 400,000, but since Presley's death Tuesday presses have spun out 250,000 more copies and the publishers have been swamped with orders. ## Jobless Welfare Cut Off

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Individuals awaiting unemployment insurance benefits will be cut off welfare except in emergency situations, Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm announced today.

Vander Zalm said the new policy is contained in amendments to the Guaranteed Available Income for Need Act (GAIN) approved Thursday by cabinet.

"Changes in the federal UIC (Unemployment Insurance Commission) have forced us to redefine our welfare policies so that only those people in emergency situations will be able to collect benefits while awaiting UIC," said Vander Zalm.

"The federal government has extended the qualification period from eight to 12 weeks and this new (provincial) regulation will ensure that those waiting for UIC will use their final paycheque or savings before coming to the human resources branch for welfare."

Persons laid off or fired must now wait two weeks before receiving any UIC benefits, while those who quit must wait eight weeks.

Alan Stubbs, programs coordinator in the ministry, said figures haven't been kept on the numbers of people applying for welfare while awaiting UIC benefits, "but from our best estimates, that waiting period is the second largest reason for people applying for welfare."

Destitution, he added, is the main reason people go to welfare for assistance.

Stubbs said that welfare will still aid people awaiting UIC benefits but only in emergencies.

"There's no specific definition of what constitutes an emergency," he said, "that depends on the discretion of our staff in the field."

RESIGNATION REJECTED

EDMONTON (CP) — J. Martin Hattersley, president of the Social Credit Party of Canada, announced Thursday he had declined to accept the resignation of MP Gilbert Rondeau (SC—Shefford, Que.).

Hattersley said Rondeau has been a member in good standing for 33 years and he had requested him to continue as a member of the national party.

BAWLF: TWO-WEEK START-UP

$2M Port Complex Eyed for Ogden Point

A multi-million dollar new port facility including a new warehouse, improved cruise ship accommodations and docking for the Black Ball ferry is envisioned in the wake of the Ogden Point fire.

Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf made the prediction Thursday and said the $2 million project could be under way in two weeks.

In addition to a new Western pulp and paper warehouse — gutted in a spectacular blaze 10 days ago — the project would also see demolition of the port's towering and unused grain elevators.

Cruise ships would get improved berthing and construction of a terminal to handle Black Ball service, long earmarked for relocation from the Inner Harbor, is also envisioned.

Bawlf made his announcement following a meeting with a dozen different bodies concerned about the future of the port facility. Among those present were representatives of the federal and provincial governments, the City, Westcan, Black Ball, King Brothers Ltd. (shipping agents for cruise vessels) and the B.C. Development Corp.

The minister said he did not think any extra wharves would have to be built to handle cruise ship traffic, which is on the increase, or the Black Ball ferry.

"Pier B may require some improvements for general purposes," he said, "but otherwise the piers are quite suitable for all needs. What is required is a proper reception facility."

He said the facilities for cruise ships visiting here were "less than palatial... there's a definite need for improvement."

Bawlf added that the cruise ship business and Black Ball would be compatible in sharing the docking facilities, but stressed that there is still some uncertainty as to whether the ferry will agree to being relocated at Ogden Point.

Bawlf denied that the provincial position at the meeting had been to beautify the site and use it exclusively for cruise ships and the ferry.

He said he is pleased that the warehouse was to be rebuilt and the freight shipping aspect of the port retained.

"We don't want the whole area to be a park," he said. "On the contrary, our main concern was to protect the economic base."

Australia To Fire Strikers

CANBERRA (AP) — The Australian Parliament outlawed strikes by government employees today, setting the stage for a showdown between the conservative government and the unions.

The government law legislation and the introduction of a tax-cutting national budget two days ago increased expectations that Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser will seek an early national election to be fought on the issue of "Who runs Australia?"

The new labor law authorizes the government to fire public employees who go on strike and to lay off public employees who cannot work because of strikes against either the government or private companies.

Industrial Relations Minister Tony Street said the law will not be enforced "unless circumstances dictate." But it was clearly aimed at a week-long strike by 2,800 postal workers at the country's central mail exchange in Sydney.

The postal strikers are fighting new shift scheduling which they say cuts their overtime pay.

Bob Hawke, president of the Australian Council of Trade Unions, warned the government that "no big industrial dispute has ever been settled through the use of threats or legal sanctions."

Other union leaders said that Fraser, who heads a conservative coalition of the Liberal and National Country parties, is seeking an issue on which to fight an election campaign.

Public-opinion polls show the government's popularity at a low level, partly due to unemployment, which is at an all-time high of 5.3 per cent with 332,793 persons out of work. Industrial production is down; foreign investment has fallen off.

Tentative PO Pact

OTTAWA (CP) — Tentative contract agreement has been reached between the post office and the 19,700-member Letter Carriers Union, of Canada, Postmaster-General Jean-Jacques Blais said today.

In a statement issued by his department, Blais said settlement was reached with the help of mediators.

Details were to be announced later.

The proposed contract, subject to a ratification vote by members, would be in effect until June, 1978.

U.S. Price Increase Moderate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Consumer prices in the U.S. rose a moderate 0.4 per cent in July — the smallest increase of 1977 — as shoppers enjoyed lower grocery and gasoline costs, the labor department announced today.

The overall monthly increase, reflecting a 4.8 per cent annual inflation rate, appeared to be the start of a cooling trend that economists have been predicting for the last half of 1977.

The July figure compared with large monthly increases averaging 0.7 per cent — or an 8.4 per cent annual rate — during the first half of the year. But economists believe the underlying inflation rate is somewhere between these two extremes at about 6 per cent.

Food costs, the chief source of soaring prices during the first half of the year, have also been responsible for the recent slowdown.

Margaret Collen looks through hole made by ice 'bomb'

Massive Ice Chunk 'Bombs' Apartment

VANCOUVER (CP) — A big chunk of ice crashed through the roof of a Kitsilano apartment Thursday and left an 18-inch-square hole in the roof. It smashed crockery on the floor and shocked the 22-year-old occupant, Margaret Collen. However, she was unhurt.

"I was in bed at the time — then I felt plaster fall on my head and got up to find big hunks of ice all over the place," she said. "I didn't believe it was happening at first — if that ice had hit me it would have killed me for sure."

A CP Air spokesman said the ice could have fallen from its DC-8 Flight 61 that was flying into Vancouver from Toronto at the time.

One theory for the falling ice is that there may have been moisture on the fuselage which formed into ice at high altitude, and then broke away as the plane descended into warmer air.

But the CP Air spokesman said ice could not accumulate on the fuselage. "It would have to be a leak from either the toilet or washbasin water systems on board."

Vancouver airport spokesman Alan Jay said the ministry of transport's civil aviation branch has launched an investigation. The probe will likely take two days.

"We can't make any positive statement as to the probable cause, but the incident is grounds for a damage claim," Jay said.

Meanwhile, Miss Collen, a fashion warehouse manager, says she intends to stay in the apartment in the 2400-block West Second despite her traumatic experience.

"I thought it was a burglar who had crashed through the roof at first," she said. "I was lucky because I had just gone to bed — if I had been in the way of the ice, it would have killed me for sure because it must have been travelling at such a high speed to be able to crash through the roof like that."

The Latest News Is Late In Parliamentary Library

By PAUL WHITELAW
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Walking into the reading room of the Parliamentary library this week is like stepping into a science fiction "time machine."

Anyone who looks at the racks of "current" newspapers — those received during the last few days — is in for a surprise.

They'll learn, for instance, that good old Jerry Ford faces an uphill battle to retain the U.S. presidency against a smiling Georgian peanut farmer called Jimmy Carter.

Ronald Reagan, it is reported on another front page, has just lost out in his bid for the Republican presidential nomination to Ford and is, very bitter.

Turning to Canadian news, a visitor to the reading room will learn that the provincial premiers are holding another conference — but not at St. Andrew's, N.B.

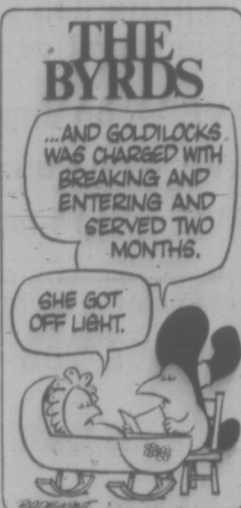

They're holed up at Banff and they've failed to reach agreement on a formula for patriation of the Canadian constitution.

The time is August 1976 — almost exactly one year ago. At least in the House of Commons and several Ottawa newspaper bureaus.

It may seem like science fiction — but you can blame the Post Office.

Each morning this week, the mail bags arriving on Parliament Hill and at some nearby news bureaus have been bringing year-old newspapers from seven western cities.

Any MP who might have been waiting breathlessly for the last 12 months was finally able Thursday to read the Aug. 12, 1976, Lethbridge

Towaway Tearaway Caper

VANCOUVER (CP) — Bob Barker of Trail was horrified when he saw his car about to be towed away — his wife and two children were asleep inside.

"My wife and kids were within an ace of being kidnapped," the 38-year-old consultant engineer said Thursday. "I had visions of chasing my family down the street."

Barker, on a two-day business trip to Vancouver, was on his way back to Trail when he and his family decided to stay at a motel just southeast of Vancouver.

"It was about 11 p.m. when I pulled up outside the motel's front door," he said. "I was in a no-parking zone and I went in to book rooms."

"My wife was dozing in the front of the car while my two kids were asleep in the back. When I came back out, I couldn't believe my eyes."

Mrs. Barker said she "was startled by a bang and the next thing I knew, the back of the car was being lifted."

"I jumped out and the towtruck driver saw me and leaped out," she said. "He apologized and quickly unhooked the car."

"I was shocked at the time. The children could have been injured by flying luggage or if the truck had driven off, the kids might have got hurt trying to get out of the car."

Wet Behind Ears Now But Learning Quickly

A baker's dozen neophyte firemen are undergoing training with the Victoria fire department. The time the men receive $1,040 a month.

The 13 recruits — the largest class in the department's history — beat out about 250 other persons in a recent competition for the positions — started training Aug. 2 under the supervision of deputy chief Mike Belton.

The first phase of the course ends Sept. 1 when the men will be assigned to one of four platoons for a five-month probationary period. During the time the men receive $1,040 a month.

Deputy fire chief Mike Heppell said today the course has been specially designed and prepared by the department and covers the spectrum of fire protection, rescue, hydraulics, firestream application, fire prevention, chemistry of fire and first aid.

The men will also have to pass written examinations.

Heppell said the last time the department had such a large class was in 1965 when the firemen won a six-hour reduction in number of hours of work a week, from 48 to 42. Then the class totalled 12.

The current recruitment was originally 12 but was increased to 13 to replace a fireman who resigned.

See the birdie, smile, (click), and now say bye-bye to your bucks.

The Better Business Bureau has warned of a door-to-door photographer in Greater Victoria who isn't delivering the full goods.

BBB chief Bill Tindall said a one-man portable photography studio is soliciting in-home portraits (using two different company names), demands full payment for the photo, and then delivers only a small proof.

Customers shouldn't lay out the full amount for the photograph until it is in their hands, although a small deposit isn't unreasonable, Tindall said.

WALLACE
... Hansard tells all

Scott Wallace: Is he B.C.'s most eloquent politician or just the windiest?

That all depends on who you talk to about the Conservative leader.

One thing's undeniable, Hansard records show Wallace has talked longer than any other MLA during the current legislative session.

Scotty, Rs rolling roundly, burred his way through a whopping 27 hours and 36 minutes of speechifying — or more than 10 per cent of all the time taken up debating ministerial estimates.

Wallace took part in every debate save of that on Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt and his longest contribution came during Economic Development Minister Don Phillips' estimates when he talked off and on for three hours and six minutes.

Who says Scotsmen are shy?

Saanich mayor Ed Lum says the municipality is losing out in dealings with the federal and provincial governments because of party politics being practised by council members, whom he refuses to name.

Prime suspect, however, is maverick Ald. John Mika, who often draws verbal blood from his colleagues.

On Tuesday, public works chairman Ald. Sandy Noel accused Mika of playing politics.

Mika, a researcher for the New Democratic Party, retorts "People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones and Ed Lum should know that better than anyone."

A bottle of French wine for a logo.

That's the offer being made by L'Alliance Francaise de Victoria — the group keeping the language and culture of the fleur-de-lis alive in westernmost Canada.

L'Alliance meets twice monthly for members to listen to lectures, watch films and practise their French with each other.

And the club wants a logo to help advertise its offerings.

Publicity chairman Brenda Cunningham has indicated a design incorporating the club's initials would be especially desirable.

Drawings or sketches can be submitted before Sept. 15 to L'Alliance at Box 5006, Station B, Victoria, V8R 6N3.

Best design wins a bottle of wine. (French, of course.)

Bon chance!

An Oak Bay resident annoyed at the noise of late-night patrons of The Snug cocktail lounge in Oak Bay Beach Hotel, had a new wrinkle to offer in a request to council that the bar close at 11 p.m.

It council could get the hotel to agree with this, wrote Mrs. A. M. Meacham, 102-2788 Satellite, it would benefit not only the neighbors but also the patrons of the lounge "who could get to bed earlier themselves."

She said the noise and nuisance of people leaving late at night "is proving intolerable" to nearby residents.

Council, which has heard this sentiment before, said nothing seems to have worked and noted that it does not have power at present to close the lounge earlier.

ROLLBACK DELAYED

An Anti-Inflation Board order involving wage rollbacks for police officers of Victoria, Esquimalt and Oak Bay municipal forces won't take effect for at least another month, a police spokesman said Thursday.

The AIB agreed to the delay following a meeting with representatives of the three departments on Tuesday.

The AIB ruled last month that 1976 wage settlements for the three departments were too high and had to be rolled back.

The effect has been a requirement that each officer repay the municipalities more than $1,000.

The total value of the rollback is about $180,000.

Pollen Ready To Challenge Tory Munro

Two years of political inactivity are enough for Peter Pollen.

The former mayor of Victoria will try to win the nomination from Progressive Conservative MP Donald Munro at the Esquimalt-Saanich riding's nominating convention Sept. 10.

Why Conservative?

"The Liberal government has created the highest level of unemployment for any industrial country in the western world... It has created disunity instead of unity... and it has taken the Western province's for an economic ride."

The Conservative party is the historical alternative, "but it needs a renaissance."

The Progressive Conservative party, "with the emphasis on progressive," is the party Pollen says he has supported federally for the past 12 years.

Pollen says he was asked by a group in the riding to seek the nomination.

When asked for his feelings on Munro, Pollen said: "I think he's a good man. That's all I care to comment. I feel I'm younger, I've had extensive business experience and extensive municipal experience."

Pollen said he could speak for the constituents of Esquimalt-Saanich in "a more vigorous and different manner" than the incumbent.

Munro, who has held the seat for five years, is in England and is not expected back next week.

When asked his chances of wresting the nomination away from Munro, Pollen said he had no idea; that he'd never gone into sure things.

He said he hoped he'd win, but on a comparison of candidates, not on an emotional loyalty issue.

Pollen said Munro is supported by a "core of Colonel Bilmps," but added he didn't know the strength of that support.

He said he was also asked to run for the Liberals, but declined: "Any party that is morally bankrupt as to ask a man to represent them who's spent more than a year criticizing them must be opposed."

Missing Accused Turns Up

A 26-year-old Victoria man who failed to appear for his trial Dec. 2, 1975, turned up at the temporary law courts at St. Ann's Academy today.

James Ronald Page, formerly of 476 Dupplin, was to have stood trial for possession of a weapon dangerous to the public peace, and assault causing bodily harm to Philip Brennan.

Page's lawyer, Gordon Hayes, of Vancouver said he voluntarily surrendered himself and sought a bail hearing to be held later today.

A one-time president of the local Liberal association, Pollen was later elected vice-president of the Victoria Progressive Conservative Association in 1969.

In 1975 he ran for the provincial Social Credit nomination in Victoria, but lost.

Pollen ran for the Social Credit provincially in Oak Bay in 1968, but lost to Liberal Allan Cox who was later defeated by Scott Wallace.

Pollen, 48, stepped down as mayor of Victoria after two terms almost two years ago.

Miracle Sprouts New Teeth

Miracle, the orphaned killer whale, seems not only to be recovering but is also cutting two new teeth and playing like a child.

Angus Matthews, manager of Sealand of the Pacific which has been handling Miracle's recovery from infected gunshot and propeller wounds, says the whale is beginning to play as if it weren't feeling any pain.

"It's an exciting thing to watch," he said. "She is beginning to show the signs of being a very playful animal and she loves all the attention she's getting."

He said veterinarians attending Miracle were puzzled at first when the one-year-old calf kept sticking its tongue out. Then they discovered it is cutting its last two teeth and is probably suffering from sore gums.

Mair Slams Barber

Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Rafe Mair attacked Victoria MLA Charles Barber today for comments the NDP member made Thursday in criticizing the governments Residential Tenancy Act.

Barber said the bill, which gives the government the power to lift rent controls, would "frighten many people, especially the poor and the elderly."

Mair said that statement is the highest of "irresponsibility and bad taste, but, unfortunately, all too typical of the remarks this member makes."

Mair said that "over and over again both in the legislature and out I have stated that rent decontrols will not affect the senior citizen and financially disadvantaged."

Mair stressed again that he cannot foresee the day when rent decontrols would affect low rental units.

"For a public servant to so misrepresent a situation and, under the guise of protecting the poor and disadvantaged in fact caused them great and unnecessary concern, is totally unworthy of any MLA," said Mair.

The minister said that Barber "owes an apology, not only to myself and the government, but particularly to all those people who may have taken his remarks seriously."

SPCA 'Out of Line' Say Rodeo Organizers

A Royal Oak Lions Club official today denied a charge by provincial SPCA director William Leach that rodeos involve deliberate cruelty to animals.

Rip Kirby, who will be in charge of a rodeo Saturday at the Luxton fairgrounds, said Leach apparently has overreacted to the show.

"He's not being fair," Kirby said, "we are not out to be cruel to animals."

Leach said he will attend the Luxton show, Victoria SPCA manager Don Adams will also be there, he said.

Kirby said Leach was out of line when he claimed that bucking straps are pulled tight around the genital area of horses to make them buck.

"The strap is actually eight inches away and is padded with sheep skin," he said.

He also denied that electric prods used on the animals are painful.

"It startles them," he said. "Cowboys backstage sometimes hit each other with it for fun. It doesn't harm them."

Kirby also noted so far four rodeos have been held on Vancouver Island and there has been no complaints of cruelty.

"It seems to me if a steer or calf could talk it would definitely prefer performing in a ring than having its throat cut for meat eaters," he added. "Let's face it the practice of killing animals for meat is cruel."

Leach said rodeos are not wanted in Victoria.

He said he has just returned from the mainland where he witnessed cruelty to rodeo animals.

Comfort Cash Given Boost By Vander Zalm

Comfort allowances for elderly residents of long-term care facilities will jump by 60 per cent and transportation allowances for handicapped persons attending achievement centres will be doubled.

The rate changes were announced today by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

The new rates will affect about 3,500 elderly residents and 3,600 physically and mentally handicapped persons around the province, and will cost the government an additional $510,000.

Comfort allowances will jump from $25 to $40 per month on Oct. 1 and at the same time travel allowances for handicapped persons going to and from achievement centres will double from $10 to $20 per month.

"Both of these increases recognize the pressure of inflation placed on these people with fixed incomes," said Vander Zalm.

He said the comfort allowance, provided to provincially-subsidized residents in private hospitals and intermediate and extended care facilities, "is an interim increase since the new long-term care program, which becomes effective in January, 1978, will allow residents to keep more of their pensions than the $40 comfort allowance."

Vander Zalm said the rate change was being brought in because "I don't think it fair to let the people wait any longer. They need the money now and even the few dollars for these months will be a help."

The total cost of the comfort allowance rate hike will be about $380,000 through January.

Vander Zalm said the increases in transportation allowances rates is part of an over-all program to upgrade services to achievement centres and will cost about $130,000 for the current fiscal year.

Cabaret Licence Lifted

Treating ladies to free jugs of wine has cost the Bacchanalia Club in Esquimalt its liquor licence for nine days.

A spokesman for the Liquor Administration Board said today the suspension, which takes effect at midnight Saturday, comes after Esquimalt police investigated complaints the club was serving free wine to women.

The spokesman said the club had held Ladies Nights Mondays to Wednesdays between 6 p.m. and 9 p.m. Only women were admitted and were given all the wine they could drink. After 9 p.m. the club opened to the public.

Such treating is a decided no-no, a violation of the regulations which prohibit a vendor to give away liquor, the spokesman said.

The club will be allowed to resume selling liquor on Aug. 29.

Television Producers Creating Monsters With Non-Stars Cast

By VERNON SCOTT
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Pity the poor television producers who build hit shows with non-stars only to discover they have created monsters who not only bit the hand that feeds them but devour everything in sight.

It's happened so often that men who structure television series have come to take the phenomenon as a fact of life.

Actors and actresses, often unknown and out of work, are signed to contracts in good faith. If the show bombs, so what. They go on to something else.

But if the show is a hit, the instant star is keenly aware he has the producer, studio and network between a rock and a hard place.

Where, after all, is a hit show without the star?

It follows as that increased salary demands are made, contracts renegotiated and "artistic creativity" clauses inserted.

Not that some producers aren't werewolves themselves and have it coming.

In most cases when a star walks out the case is closed, and so is the series. Sometimes a show staggers on without him or her. The star may be replaced.

The problem is not unknown in professional sports. But athletic teams can continue to fill stadia minus star sluggers or quarterbacks.

It's different with a television show. Actors are rarely interchangeable. Lee Majors is the bionic man and that's that. It's doubtful viewers would accept, say, Jack Lord in the role.

When Carroll O'Connor threatened to leave All in the Family a few years ago the producers were prepared to write in a funeral scene and carry on without him. But would it have worked?

M-A-S-H recovered from the loss of Wayne Rogers as Trapper John last year, bringing in Mike Farrell to play B.J. Hunnicutt, a different character.

Charlie's Angels is replacing rebellious Farrah Fawcett, the current American blonde goddess, with Cheryl Ladd. The results won't be known until the series returns to the air this fall.

This past season Bud Yorkin, who produced Sanford and Son in partnership with Norman Lear in Tandem Productions, found himself without the services of both his stars, Redd Foxx and Demond Wilson.

Since its inception 5 years ago Sanford and Son was a permanent fixture high in the Nielsen ratings.

What to do? Bow out and reap the rewards of syndicated reruns? Try to replace the actors? Cry a lot?

Yorkin decided to restructure the series, bring in new people, continue with some of the minor characters and keep a few of the old sets.

The result is Sanford Arms, which makes its debut this fall.

"This is a new show with a different concept but with some continuing elements," said Yorkin, showing the customary strain of pressures common to television producers about to launch new projects.

There will be a brand new family consisting of a widower with a son and daughter. They take the mortgage on Fred Sanford's junk yard and the boarding house next door to it.

"The new cast is tremendously talented. The father will be played by Teddy Wilson who is going to be a big star (look out there, Yorkin, you know what happens with new series stars). The kids are played by Tina Andrews who is 18 and John Earl. He's 12.

"Coming back are La Wanda Page as Aunt Esther. She will play the caretaker. Whitman Mayo (Grady) and Dan Bexley (Bubba) are returning, too, but they won't be in every episode.

"We're also introducing other new characters. The comedy will be more real. I think we'll keep the old Sanford audience and gain new fans."

Yorkin may or may not be whistling in the dark.

There is a school of thought that viewers zero in on a particular star rather than the trappings of a show itself. Such may be the case with Foxx's interpretation of Fred Sanford, genuinely original and loveable character.

Whether audiences will find the same enthrallment with the newcomers is moot.

"The whole industry is rooting for Sanford Arms," Yorkin said. "People in show business are sympathetic to what we're doing, especially producers and the networks. They'd like to see us make a go of a series without stars."

"You see, this is the only medium in the world where not a dime more is paid producers for high ratings. If your show is a hit, the producer contractually cannot ask for more money."

It figures that if a star is earning $5,000 a week when the show debuts, then demands $30,000 an episode when it becomes established, the

PNE FEATURES NATIVE ARTISANS, ENTERTAINERS

A cast of native artisans, entertainers and athletes from the Far North "invade" the Pacific National Exhibition Aug. 20-Sept. 3 for a wide-ranging presentation of Eskimo and Indian crafts on site, display of priceless handicrafts, and stage shows featuring songs, dances and sports.

Sponsored by the government of the Northwest Territories, the artisans are also planning to build an outdoor Unukshook eight to 10 feet high, and to present it to the Pacific National Exhibition as a permanent landmark.

Famed Inuit Eskimo sculptors Paul Tooolookook and David Panneok will each create two soapstone carvings which will be valued at $10,000 apiece when completed.

The two artists will work daily at the Fair, and will actually arrive in Vancouver a week before the PNE to begin chipping the 750- to 1,000-pound grey-green soapstone blocks being flown here from the Arctic.

Tooolookook and Panneok will decide on their subjects after appraising the rocks for shape, size, color and texture.

Also demonstrating their specialties daily are Slavey Indians Corinne Sabourin and Ernestine Minoza. They are experts in the traditional and near-extinct skills of moose-hair tufting and porcupine-quill looming.

One of the finest whipcrackers of the Far North, Simon Tookoome, is the star of the stage show. Tookoome snaps a 25-foot seal-hide whip, used by Eskimos not only to drive their Husky dog teams, but to hunt caribou.

Tookoome, a renowned artist in his own right as a print-maker, is also an expert Inukshook maker. An Inukshook is a stone piling 18-25

PAYOFF PUZZLE

Correct Answers to Last Week's Puzzle

CLUES ACROSS:

6. REVIVE not revile. One you REVIVE (e.g., from a near-drowned state) certainly has cause to remember you, but you can revile a man without his knowledge.
8. COVE not cave. Such a person might cross a COVE in the safe period of low tide, but would hardly risk getting "trapped." A very cautious person is hardly likely to venture into a cave anyway.
10. FLOUT not clout. To clout the person would be positively starting trouble, not merely inviting it.
13. TEA not sea. The caffeine, etc., in TEA certainly makes it a stimulant, but the sea hardly stimulates people who are used to it.
14. LAMB not limb. LAMB (meat) is favored, since the question of fault arises when it is "badly cut" (butchered or carved), whereas a cut limb is an injury whether bad or not.
17. POOR not boor. A certain type of man would hate to be called POOR. "Boor" is a plain insult to any man.
22. BORE not sore. The question of fairness links up with human conduct, rather than simple misfortune.
23. GLUM not alum. The clue is concerned with personal impressions, as of a caring sort of person who notices whether children seem to be happy or GLUM. The slums are hard facts; it's not a case of too many children "seeming" to have such poor homes.
24. BEANS not means. Growing one's own BEANS is an economical thing to do. Growing means will suit any man, not merely one "who likes to economize."

CLUES DOWN:

1. TRUCK not trick. One looks to the mechanical performance of a well-maintained TRUCK to be "satisfactory" in a practical way. A trick performed by a magician is supposed to be entertaining, rather.
2. HIKE not bike. The clue's reference to one's "own two legs" suggests a sturdy independence of mechanical aids (car, bike, etc.), as when on a HIKE.
3. TEST not rest. A patient wouldn't need to go into hospital purely for a rest, which could be had elsewhere. A TEST may require hospital facilities.
4. PARLOR not pallor. PARLOR links up especially well with the theme of entertaining a visitor. There is no evident reason to suppose that the host might have a noticeable pallor.
11. HALL not ball or wall. As a building, a HALL is directly apt. A great wall may not be part of a building. One may visualize a grand ball in terms of couples dancing, etc., or a ballroom scene rather than a building as such.
12. DAMS not damp. DAMS are associated with "water" in the ordinary sense of that liquid; but damp is commonly associated with humidity, vapor, etc. Alternatively, damp is itself a form of water, rather than something else "associated" with water.
15. BOOKS not boots. Special BOOKS could well be for reference, study, etc., rather than reading. Hence, one might be said to "use" special BOOKS; but, rather, to wear special boots.
16. DREAM not dread. A "process" is a continuing series of happenings (DREAM) rather than a static condition (dread).

'Dead' Indians Only On U.S. Television

WINNIPEG (CP) — The song asks, "Can you tell me how to get, how to get to Sesame Street?" and folksinger Buffy Sainte-Marie can probably give very good directions. She's been a regular on the show for the last three years.

In Winnipeg for an appearance at a folk festival this weekend, the Cree singer-songwriter explained why she spends one-third of every year working in children's television.

"There are no native people on TV in the States, unless they're playing dead Indians," she says. "One reason I took the Sesame Street job was I wanted to show people that we say more than 'how' and 'ugh.'"

Buffy has taught Big Bird

how to count in Cree and visited an Indian pueblo in New Mexico with other regulars on the show. She says her work has had an effect on both native and non-native children.

"The most important thing about being on television is that we're there. Some Indian kid back on the reserve can say 'Hey, there's an Indian kid on TV.'"

Seeing Indians on a show like Sesame Street also teaches non-native children new attitudes, she says.

"If Big Bird says that Indians are OK, those little babies are going to hear it," she says. "It'll rise above the racism of the older generation."

Buffy's stint on Sesame Street is only part of her efforts for the Indian cause. Seven years ago she founded the Native North American Women's Association. The association sponsors college lectures, concert tours and articles in Indian newspapers.

"Our generations, as they have been broken, have either separated from our old people by language, by religion or by laws that have made our religions and our languages illegal. We're caught between many false values. We don't really know what we're supposed to be. We don't really know whether we're white or Indian."

Indians have to believe in the greatness of their heritage, she says. "The hands that your nation comes from, the gifts that your nation has, came from us. Really, there's a great heritage the world has drawn from Indian people."

Stefanie Helping Animals

By NANCY ANDERSON

HOLLYWOOD — Stefanie Powers, Feather in the ABC-TV con and cop series, "The Feather and Father Gang," says she's abandoned her once-held ambition to adopt an Italian boy named Silvano Rampucci, because he's now almost old enough to adopt her.

"The child is no longer a child," says she. "He's 19 years old. Now he's hoping to come to the United States on a student visa."

Powers who has been married but has no children met

STEFANIE POWERS

Silvano when he was a little fellow and she was in Italy making a movie and was so enchanted by him that she wanted to become his mamma.

But her efforts to adopt were consistently frustrated.

She says it finally dawned on her that the child was no longer a child as they sat together not long ago in a Roman cafe and a Hollywood friend of hers, upon being introduced to Silvano, raised eyebrows and gave a knowing smile.

"I know what he was thinking," Stefanie sighs.

Though she used to be deeply interested in helping all people, not just Italian orphans, the ABC-TV star now devotes more of her energies to helping whales and others of God's nonhuman creatures.

"I've switched my attention from the human predicament to the predicament of wildlife and ocean life," she avers.

"These creatures are victims of the human predicament. Also, we depend upon them for food."

Stella Stevens Finds Home

CARLTON, Wash. (AP) — After years as a Hollywood sex symbol, actress Stella Stevens says she has found home, far from the movie capital.

Home is an aged, isolated two-storey ranch house in north-central Washington's rugged Methow Valley.

"I wanted to find a home for myself," she said. "I've never had one before."

"They are mobbed by fans. Lionized. They can't handle it. They want to become instant millionaires."

Yorkin hopes Sanford ARMs is a hit. But then what of his new instant stars?

TV MAILBAG

By THOM MEAD
HOLLYWOOD — The TV Mailbag:

Q: Would you kindly explain the relationship between Mike Douglas of the Mike Douglas Show and the Michael Douglas of the Streets of San Francisco and actor Kirk Douglas? — I.G., Victoria, Canada.

A. The Mike Douglas of the Mike Douglas Show is not related to the other two Douglases. The only thing they have common is the last names. However, the Michael Douglas, who left the Streets of San Francisco series to become a movie producer and director, is the son of actor Kirk Douglas. I hope that clears up the matter.

Q. I want to know where I can write Cloris Leachman about a white hat she wore on the trolley car in San Francisco. — E.H., Los Angeles, Calif.

A. I suggest you write to MTM Enterprises, 4024 Radford Ave., Studio City, Calif. 91604.

Q. Can you tell me what happened to Torny Orlando and Dawn? They are one of my very favorites and no one seems to know why they just all of a sudden were gone. — B.R.L., Ypsilanti, Mich.

A. The Torny Orlando and Dawn Show was cancelled by CBS.

Q. I am concerned that the program Emergency is being taken off the air. It is one of the really worthwhile shows — one of the few suitable for the whole family. — G.A., Victoria, Canada.

A. Emergency is returning this fall but not as a weekly series. The show will be aired on NBC as an occasional two-hour special.

Q. I would like to know all there is to know about Anson Williams of Happy Days. — D.M., Phoenix, Ariz.

A. Born in Los Angeles, Williams attended Burbank High School. He became interested in acting while attending Pierce Junior College. He subsequently enrolled as a drama major at California State College.

Williams began acting professionally in such summer stock productions as The Music Man, The Sound of Music and 3rd Pacific. His television credits include Marcus Welby, M.D., Owen Marshall, Counselor at Law, and Bridget Loves Bernie.

Some of his vital statistics: 5 foot 10 inches tall, brown hair, blue eyes and weighs 144 pounds. His avocational interests are poetry writing, baseball, football, surfing, playing the clarinet and ecology.

Questions of general interest will be answered in the column. Volume of mail prohibits personal replies. Inquiries should be sent to Thom Mead, TV Mailbag, in care of Prevue, Box 200, Victoria, B.C. V8W 2N4.

feet high, built in the likeness of a man. They serve in the North as directional arrows, and to attract curious caribou that are hunted for food.

Some of the Inukshooks are believed to have been erected some 3,000 years ago, and it is a mystery to this day as to how the stones were transported and raised on the bare tundra. Use of white and dark rock make the Inukshooks stand out against snow or the bare ground in summer.

They are referred to as the "silent sentinels" of the tundra.

Ernie Bernhardt leads the five-member athletic team which will perform unique Northern games such as the Alaskan High Kick and Bench Reach. They provide a preview of the Arctic Winter Games coming up March 19-25, 1978 at Hay River and Pine Point, NWT.

Also on stage are the singer-drum dancer team of Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Hikok of Coppermine; and dancer Jane Ukpahak and singer Lucy Kawnak of Baker Lake, NWT. They will do traditional Eskimo songs and dances.

The display of handicrafts includes Eskimo and Indian toys, footwear, dress, artifacts and carvings. This is the same "Juried" exhibit — every item was judged and chosen with great care — that was such a hit at the 1976 Montreal Olympics and the World Crafts Council in Toronto in 1974.

Sculptors Toolookook and Panneok, and handicrafters Sabourin and Minoza, work daily during the Fair in the Lower Level, B.C. Pavilion Building, where the display is also located.

The stage shows, daily at 2:15, 4:30 and 7:15 p.m., are on the Pioneer Plaza stage, located north of the B.C. Pavilion.

This year the 17-day fair is wrapped in a package of Country Fun, City Style, coupled with a major Salute to B.C.'s Pioneers.

Slade's Play Now on Film

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Oscar winner Ellen Burstyn and Alan Alda of CBS's M-A-S-H have been signed by producer Walter Mirisch to star in Universal's Same Time, Next Year, based on the hit Broadway play.

Robert Mulligan will direct the comedy and Bernard Slade will adapt his play for the film. The play is about two married people who meet once a year for an illicit affair.

Miss Burstyn starred in the original production which opened in New York in 1975. Filming will begin in January, 1978.

The Young Stranger (xxx), on 13 at midnight. A moving story about a boy and his relationship with his father who is too busy to understand his son. Based on a TV play. James MacArthur, James Daly, and Kim Hunter. Well directed by John Frankenheimer. (1957).

Season of Passion (xxx), on 6 at 12:10 a.m. Australian-made drama about sugar-cane cutters. Off-beat movie with a little-known locale. Well acted. Ernest Borgine, John Mills and Anne Baxter. (1961).

Shake Hands with the Devil (xxx), on 5 at 12:10 a.m. A grim tale of the Irish rebellion. Good cast makes up for the shortcomings of the script. Michael Redgrave, Glynis Johns, James Cagney and Don Murray. (1959).

Boots Malone (xxx), on 7 at 1:05 a.m. Fast paced racetrack story with good performances by William Holden and Johnny Stewart. (1957).

Alan Hamel, on 5 at 2:30 p.m. Among the guests will be composer Hagood Hardy and actors Kevin Dobson, Kate Jackson and Richard Jordan.

Bobby Vinton, on 6 at 7 p.m. The Peaches and comedian John Byner are among the performing guests.

Eyewitness—Dramatization Special, on 9 at 9 p.m. Three stories are dramatized in this program, which draws its dialogue entirely from real life. 1. "The Crash of Flight 212" re-enacts the 1974 downing of a passenger jet in heavy North Carolina fog. First Officer: Jon Terry, Captain: Addison Powell. 2. "A Man Charged with Prostitution" explores what host Andrew Mac-Millan calls "a vivid example of legislated inequality between the sexes." Pisciotti: Paul Vincent. 3. "Karen Quinlan: Life or Death" is culled from the court transcript of the much-publicized New Jersey case (1975). It focuses on Karen Quinlan's parents, who argue that her life-support systems should be turned off because she is in a "chronic vegetative state." Quinlan: Mark Dawson. Mrs. Quinlan: Billie Lou Watt. Attorney Armstrong: Jim Roberts.

In concert, on 6 at 10 p.m. Among the guests performers are Seals & Crofts, rock singer Eddie Kendricks, folkrock artist Jesse Colin Young, and soul singer Walter Heath.

ANSON WILLIAMS (left) co-stars as Patsy Webber, Erin Moran as Joanie Cunningham and Donny Most as Ralph Malph, in "Happy Days," popular ABC Television Network comedy series about teen-agers growing up in Milwaukee in the 1950's, which begins its third full season in the fall, airing weekdays at 10 a.m. on Channel 4.

SUNDAY

AM Network
3:05 p.m. Special Occasion — Host: Alan Maitland. Today: The Roots of Black Music, prepared by Doug Crawford in London, England. Traces the development of African rhythms to the music forms of jazz, blue reggae, gospel reggae, rock 'n' roll and modern pop music. Looks into many forms of African music from Cora, the sound of the northern peoples bordering the Sahara down to the ballads of the Zulu people. In this black music show the music rarely stops.

9:05 p.m. Northern Showcase — Fifth of a series of documentaries on the Canadian North. Tonight: The View from the north. Life in the north, viewed from both sides of the 60th parallel.

FM Network
3:05 p.m. The Dance — Host: Harry Mannis. Music from Antony Tudor's ballets danced by the National Ballet of Canada; presented by the Company's musical director and conductor, George Crum. 10 p.m. Sunday Pops Concert — Jean Deslauriers conducts the Montreal Symphony Orchestra in performances of Gounod's Faust (excerpts include Night of Walpurgis); Gliere's Concert for coloratura soprano — soloist Louise Lebrun; Enesco's Romanian Rhapsodie No. 1; Rachmaninoff's first movement of the concerto for piano and orchestra No. 2 (Neil Choten, soloist); Saint-Saens' Samson and Delila and Bachanale. The performance will be broadcast simultaneously on CBC-TV.

MONDAY

AM Network
2:04 p.m. Crime Drama — "Inspector West at Bay", a thriller serial in 8 parts by John Creasey. In this exciting story Roger West of Scotland Yard, his wife Janet and their two sons become targets for the vengeance of an embittered convict.

8:04 p.m. Pick of the Goons — Tonight: "Napoleon's Piano" — Answering an advertisement to move a piano from one room to another for the large sum of 5 pounds, young Neddie Seagoon finds he has been tricked. It is not, as Neddie at first thinks, "money for old rope", but a much more cunning job that those arch-criminals Brigadier Grytpype-Thynge and Count Fred Moriarty have in mind. They want him to bring Napoleon's piano, now in the Paris Louvre, over to England — for a quick resale.

11:20 p.m. Nightcap — Actor Burgess Meredith has also been a producer, director and writer. He discusses his diverse interest in an enlightening conversation from New York.

FM Network

4:04 p.m. August Arts National — Host: Pianist Glenn Gould. A week of personal memorabilia, some of Gould's favourites and some surprises. Part I — Hebrides Overture and Scotch Symphony (Mendelssohn) (London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Peter Maag). Part II — Night Ride, and Sunrise (Sibelius) (New Philharmonia, conducted by Georges Pretre); Luonotar (Sibelius) (Gwyneth Jones, soprano; London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Antal Dorati); Symphony No. 3 by Finnish composer Aulis Salinen (Finnish Radio Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Okko Kamu).

8:04 p.m. Vivat Rex — From the BBC, a dramatic chronicle of the English Crown from 1307 to 1533 by Shakespeare, Marlowe and their contemporaries. From the accession of Edward II to the birth of Elizabeth I, two centuries of struggle and bloodshed are related in fact and legend. Narrated by Richard Burton.

Home of the Week

Modern Home for Family Living

Three-bedroom family home with room for future expansion, a recreation room, bathroom, and utility, in the roughed-in basement. The two-car carport can easily be enclosed. In colder climates, without too great a structural change or cost.

At the front entrance foyer is a guest coat-closet and twin staircases down to the basement and up to the bedroom wing.

On the upper level, to the rear of the building, is the dining room with open balustrade overlooking the living room, but a few short steps to the kitchen. The 'U' shaped kitchen is complete with all conveniences and has an eating counter and pass-through on the family room side. The comfortable family room opens directly to a rear-deck and has a stairway down at the side of the house. Another convenience to this family area is the three-piece bath located centrally between the bedrooms and family room.

Luxury and utility are main features of the master bedroom. A large walk-in wardrobe and a three-piece shower en suite. The two smaller bedrooms use the twin vanity, full bath, that also doubles as a guest powder room.

Isolated from the bedroom wing the living room is ideal for large parties, which if required can extend to the back patio in the summer through sliding glass doors. During the winter months there is a snug wood-burning fireplace to create a cozy atmosphere.

Plan for design No. 576-1505 may be obtained at a cost of $60 for the first set and $9 for each additional set, plus $3.50 for postage and handling. B.C.

Send for the current edition of Select Home Designs Series 33 featuring imaginative decorating and home improvement ideas plus more than 300 quality home plans of every type. Available for $2.25 ($1.75 plus 50 cents postage and handling). To order these items please send cheque or money order payable to the Home of the Week. Address to: Home of the Week c/o Victoria Press, 382 West Broadway, Vancouver, B.C. V5Y 1R2.

WORLD TURNERS CROWD PLEASERS

task recently after one of their performances.

NEW YORK — Eileen Fulton and Dennis Cooney, who vie for the "meanness award" on "As the World Turns" (CBS), in their roles of Lisa Colman and Jay Stallings, have been turning on audiences wherever they go with their successful song and dance show. Tripping the light fantastic in the manner of Fred and Ginger, the attractive duo has been doing tremendous business. When Eileen and Dennis played Sullivan, Illinois, one group of fans admitted they traveled 600 miles just to see their favorites in person.

Eileen and Dennis begin their show with a special number in which they sing about the trials and tribulations of Lisa and Jay and then they leave their soap opera characters behind, settling into a razzle-dazzle show biz presentation. A highlight of the show is a medley in which both stars sing songs relative to their Southern upbringing. Eileen's in South Carolina and Dennis' in the South Bronx it's a real crowd-pleaser, as is their dancing of the Jitterbug.

Dennis has learned a great deal from the lovely Eileen about how a star acts with her fans. After every show, Eileen sets aside at least an hour, and sometimes more, for fans to come backstage for a chat and an autograph.

When Eileen and Dennis were breaking in their present act in Elmsford, New York, Dennis' mom attended the show and confided to Eileen later that she really was surprised at her son's vocal power.

"When he was a little boy, the most singing he did would be a bit of harmony with his dad to 'Take Me Out to the Ball Game,'" she said.

Because of the nature of the selfish and miserable characters they play on "As the World Turns," the stars are often chastised by the devoted viewers.

Eileen and Dennis still laugh when they think about the old lady who took Dennis' Jay to

"How can you be so mean to your wife?" she said. "You really ought to be taken out and horsewhipped for the way you treat that poor thing."

After her outburst which lasted for a full minute, she added, "Now bend down and let me give you a great big kiss."

PLOT PORTENTS

Now that even the orderlies know Mary Ellen tried to murder Terri on "General Hospital," authorities take action by setting a sanity hearing for Mary Ellen. Naturally, the lady believes everyone is plotting against her, so it's back to the booby hatch for poor Mary. Friend Lenny is also being tried for the attempted murder of Terri. On the bright side, Audrey has decided to marry Steve.

After caring for Tom, who feels he will never be useful again, his wife Alice must undergo a hysterectomy operation on "Days of Our Lives" (NBC). She could easily crack under the double strain, and deserves sympathy. Few tears however will be shed for pill-popping Samantha, Marlena's twin-sister, a lady geared to take the sneaky approach to life. Samantha needs help and Laura looks like the designated doctor for the job. With fall coming, Valerie will be written out, allowing Tina Andrews to report for duty this week as a regular on "Sanford Arms." Newcomer Chris Kostichuk, the new hotshot engineer at Anderson Mfg., gets off on the wrong foot with Mary, but he figures to be her new man now that Neil is out of the picture.

Since Jill has dumped David Mallory and the prospect of a loveless marriage on "The Young and the Restless" will she now make an effort to hook boss Derek? Nurse Cynthia Harris won't give up the idea of wooing Snapper away from Chris. And Jennifer senses death is not far away.

The Stars of Yesterday

Where Are They Today?

By NANCY ANDERSON
HOLLYWOOD — When the former Walter Buserkeys flies through the air with the greatest of ease at the Las Vegas Hilton, he all but outdoes Peter Pan.

For when Peter Pan flew into the Darling nursery, he only broke up a household. But when the ex-Buserkeys, much more famous as Liberace, sails elegantly over the Hilton stage, merrily winking at his audience, he breaks up the 2,000-seat showroom.

The flying bit, a much talked about, sometime feature of Lee's performance, is a larky outgrowth not only of his showmanship and imagination but of his vigor and zest.

Lee's no longer a kid but he still brings more pizzazz to a showroom than many a stripping half his age.

"I eat a well-balanced diet that's high in protein,"

Liberace proclaims when he's asked what magic ingredient goes into his gusto.

"Meat, fish, eggs."

"I stay away from artificially sweetened things, and I don't like canned foods. Fruits and vegetables taste better and are better for you in their natural state."

Liberace's vigorous showmanship is so much a part of him that he now wears his bedazzling public image like a skin.

The custom-built cars, the 146-pound, floor-length mink cape completely lined with Austrian rhinestones, the homes, including one in Las Vegas with a garage that's a combination ballroom-dining room — these dramatic adjuncts to his personality and life-style encompass him until they've erased all vestiges of his own natural state, though — believe it or not — he had one.

Once upon a time in the 1920s, the now gaudy and glamorous Liberace was a little boy (though even then he wasn't an ordinary one) without a candelabra to his name.

As little Wladziu Valentino Liberace, son of immigrant parents, Lee was reared in a musical family.

His father, Salvatore, played French horn with the Milwaukee Symphony. His mother played piano at home, and, by the time Wladziu was 4 years old, so did he.

At 14, he made his debut as a soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra but he wasn't concentrating entirely on the classics.

For in high school, he headed a combo called "The Mixers," and shortly after he was appearing on a limited nightclub circuit as Walter Buserkeys.

He finally dropped the names Buserkeys and Wladziu Valentino on the advice of a piano-playing family friend who'd dropped his own first names, Ignace Jan, and was known simply as Paderewski.

By this time Lee was doing very well in the world of show biz, thank you.

In 1950, he even made a movie, appearing as a honky-tonk piano player in "South Sea Sinner" starring Shelley Winters.

But it wasn't until 1952 that he really hit his stride after a television producer saw and heard him playing at San Diego's Coronado Hotel and booked him as a summer replacement for Dinah Shore.

A syndicated series, two Emmys and so much money followed that Liberace coined his famous phrase about crying all the way to the bank.

Recently, Liberace was appearing nightly at the Las Vegas Hilton while rehearsing four new shows, meeting a schedule which should have exhausted even his prodigious supply of energy.

But during his near-midnight, between-shows break, he was as bouncy and cheerful as ever.

"I don't believe in health fads, nor do I take a lot of vitamins."

"I take just one vitamin preparation a day which is all-inclusive."

"But I feel strongly that sensible eating and mild exercise are important. So I jog some, I work out at a local gym about three times a week and I walk as much as possible."

"Youthfulness will always remain the thing fans want to see in their favorite performers," he holds, "so I want to look as young as possible, as long as possible."

Staying fit enough to wear his jewelry on stage is challenge enough, for Lee invariably performs loaded with baubles which he flourishes with a comment to the audience, "I'm glad you want to see them, because — let's face it — you bought 'em."

This bit of business invariably gets a big hand and a big laugh.

Rich enough to retire many times over, Lee doesn't plan to. Ever!

"Saying you want to retire is like saying you're dead," he declares.

"After all the years of struggle, what do I want to give this up for?"

"I'm just beginning to enjoy myself!"

THEATRE

For Links Fun Leave Wife, Theory Home

By JACK SCOTT

Colman McCarthy's collection of short essays — "The Pleasure of the Game — The 'Theory Free' Guide to Golf" — bears a title that will intrigue every golfer, whether hacker or low-handicapper, but the rest is as much anti-climax as the superlative drive that turns into a disastrous slice.

A more-than-competent writer, editorialist and columnist for The Washington Post and a golf player and philosopher of some ability, McCarthy begins with the sound conviction that the royal and ancient game "exercises the body, stimulates the mind and elevates the spirit."

But, having established that, he then demonstrates that (a) the game is one of the most hazardous of any amateur pastime and (b) that, contrary to the promise of "theory free" golf he has just as many theories as the next man on the tee and perhaps a few more. The title, then, is both deceiving and contradictory.

In one of his brief essays, for example, McCarthy demonstrates only too well that the poor old golfer is constantly prone to death or injury from lightning, insect bite, sun stroke, heart attack, golf cart, stray shot, snake bite, falling tree limb or irate golfer.

His conclusion — "Playing it safe on the fairways means that, like most of this planet's pleasures, golf ought to be pursued by the cautious hedonist, not the giddy one" — may be entirely accurate, but leaves the impression that some other hobby — bull fighting, say, or Russian Roulette — might be preferred. This is hardly "pleasurable."

What's more, he gives us a ghoulish summary of some incidents on the links that may cause any sensitive golfer to give up the game instantly.

There is the case of one Edward M. Harrison who, while playing alone at the Inglewood Country Club in Seattle, apparently broke the shaft of his driver which pierced his groin and caused him to bleed to death. Or one Harold Kalles of Toronto who died six days after his throat had been cut by a golf club shaft which broke against a tree. Or one Myrl Hammore, of Los Angeles, whose golf cart went out of control and killed him. Or another Los Angeles golfer who, showing his 12-year-old son how to drive, was struck by the boy on the right temple and succumbed on the spot. Or the Toronto man who scored a hole-in-one and went to that great pro shop in the sky with a heart attack.

As for a "theory free" guide, McCarthy is just busting with his own concepts, as are most skilled players, that, good though they may be, are pretty dam'd tiresome for anyone who is determined to have fun out there.

He gives us his cherished notions of putting ("hit it hard enough"), cutting short on the back-swing ("you must understand that the hitting area is reached when the downswing hands are at the level of the right hip"), bunker shots ("the finesse of the bunker shot comes from slicing, rather than blasting, into the sand") and other tips almost guaranteed to louse up any high-handicap player.

Since all of this is available in ten thousand instructional books ghost-written for the great professionals, McCarthy's expert, low-key writing style is largely wasted and the more contemplative approach of his title simply never surfaces.

Perhaps the strangest of all his pieces, however, is called "Are Love and Golf Compatible?" in which McCarthy takes the nonsensical position that a husband and wife should regularly play golf together to keep the marriage intact.

"All of the unloving couples of my acquaintance persist in one error: they do not play golf together," he writes. "I have never met a twosome whose shared delights on the fairways were not enough to cover the inevitable bad lies in the other parts of their lives. Golf creates lasting alliances because it provides couples with a fascinating topic of conversation . . . (The golfing couple) will have a long and smiling union."

Since the divorce courts are full of couples who can agree that golf was the ultimate confrontation, not to mention causes of outright homicide, such advice may be as suspect as any in this rather disappointing book.

Perhaps McCarthy will, one day, write another, beginning with and proving his original premise, that golf can be played with pleasure and without these helpful, inhibiting suggestions, but, in any event, this isn't it.

THE PLEASURES OF THE GAME, by Colman McCarthy. Beaverbooks. $9.60.

At Home in Wilderness

By HUMPHRY DAVY

Anyone interested in homesteading in the wilderness? I suggest that you first read this true life story by Trudy Turner, who with her husband runs an isolated farm at Lonesome Lake, near Bella Coola, about 300 miles north of Victoria.

This remarkable woman built her own cabin, felled trees and removed huge stumps to clear the land, freighted supplies by pack horse, boat and raft, and built rustic bridges and trails through wilderness areas.

It's a story of an extremely resourceful woman — a woman who would put many experienced wilderness buffs to shame.

But first let's go back to the author's background. She is the daughter of Ralph Edwards, the "Crusoe of Lonesome Lake," who died this summer at Prince Rupert at the age of 85. Edwards, a pioneer settler, is credited with saving Canada's largest flock of trumpeter swans from extinction. He first saw the flock of 35 birds in 1912 when he arrived in the isolated valley in search of land. The species, once widespread throughout North America, were reduced in numbers to a few hundred shortly after the turn of the century. Hunting and loss of habitat were the main causes.

In the early 1920's Edwards reported to federal wildlife officials the desperate plight of the flock which wintered at Lonesome Lake. The swans were in danger of extinction when the lake froze over, cutting off their source of food.

Later, he was appointed part-time warden by the Canadian Wildlife Service and as a result embarked on a program of feeding the huge, rare birds.

The work is now carried on by his daughter Trudy, who with her husband Jack and daughter Susan still feed the swans during the winter months.

Edwards and his daughter first came to public attention in 1957 when they were the subject of a book, Crusoe of Lonesome Lake, by U.S. author Leland Stowe. It's a story of how the father carved out a farm in the wilderness, built his own sawmill and hydro-electric plant.

This new book is the daughter's side of the story. After reading it, I concluded that life would have been much harder on Ralph Edwards without the help of his daughter. She evidently was the one he relied upon, even more so than his two sons.

She herself recalls that when she was 15 she was considered by the family to be a capable ranch-hand, able to take care of herself in the woods and do her share on pack-trains.

But at the age of 21 she rebelled against living at home, pre-empted land in the same valley, and built an 8x14 foot cabin constructed of cedar logs. It took her only three days to complete the project with the help of a horse which hauled the logs and lined them up.

Then she hacked out a road, built a 70-foot bridge across the Atnarko River, started to clear the land, and grew some hay. She worked alone, using only hand-tools.

She did this in a year and still found time to work on her parents' farm and take care of her own cows at her place.

While two chapters of this book deal with the trumpeter swans, I found the most interesting parts were those dealing with the life and work of Trudy and her husband in this isolated valley, situated about 57 miles from Bella Coola.

The author's views on wilderness also reveal her to be someone who understands nature, realizing that she herself is only part of the vast natural system.

As she puts it: "Wherever we go we consider trees are home, much as an otter feels at home in water . . . We are not fighting Nature when we clear some land of its trees. We are not struggling with the forest, we are merely changing the type of plant which grow on that piece of ground."

It's to the writer's credit that she makes no attempt to romanticize her life, and gives the hard facts of living in a wilderness area. But she wouldn't exchange the life for one in the city.

One thing she makes clear to any would-be wilderness homesteader — that a person without resourcefulness is bound to fail, no matter how easily he can adjust himself to a life of isolation.

The book is co-authored by Ruth M. McVeigh, who provides the perspective of an "outsider" on the life of the couple on their isolated farm.

Sex Can Be Dull

Despite its title, this book is not likely to become a Canadian best-seller.

It is a collection of papers written by 30 doctors, psychiatrists and others with the only unifying theme being that they are in some way about sex.

For example, some deal with the clinical treatment of sexual disorders while others discuss population trends, family planning and poverty.

Although edited this year, the papers are undated and some of the chapters have already been overtaken by new discoveries in human sexology.

The book is intended as a textbook or handbook for professionals and not for general reading. It's just as well. It's pretty dry stuff. —A.F.

Daphne du Maurier Gives Us 'A Delicate Gem of a Memoir'

All experience is grist to the creative writer's mill, which is why so few novelists write their memoirs. Another reason is that a professional writer, in order to achieve and maintain success, must exercise rigid self-discipline, and all autobiography is self-indulgent.

It was a shock, therefore, to receive a memoir written by Daphne du Maurier, one of the most self-disciplined and successful of contemporary novelists. It was a further shock to learn that she is 70 because, for some reason, I have always regarded her as ageless.

With a regrettable lack of enthusiasm, I opened her book after dinner with the firm intention of reading a couple of chapters before turning in early. The book starts out with early childhood memories — siblings, nurseries, nannies, pranks — but with a difference: the writing is tightly controlled and the reader senses at once that instead of the usual maudlin stuff this is a highly interesting and perceptive portrait of the author when young.

Had I taken more notice of the title — Growing Pains: The Shaping of a Writer — I wouldn't have been so surprised. Anyway, I was hooked right away and willingly allowed the book to keep me up until two in the morning.

The book is devoid of name-dropping, which is especially pleasing considering Miss du Maurier's background. Her father, Gerald, was England's leading actor-manager, a gregarious man who knew everyone worth knowing and entertained lavishly. His father, George, was a famous artist and playwright. Home was an extension of the theatre and it was a heady atmosphere for a young, impressionable girl but, unlike her sisters, Daphne kept herself aloof from it all.

The unstated theme of the narrative is implied on the opening page when the three children return home from a walk with their nurse when the adults are lunching. From the hubbub of voices it is apparent that there are many guests. Daphne dashes upstairs to the safety of the familiar nursery, her own terrain. She is five.

For the next 20 years, throughout childhood, adolescence, and into early adulthood, she will be dashing hither and yon, seeking a place of her own choosing where she can put down roots and fashion a career of her own which will free her from the financial strings that tie her firmly to her loving but over-possessive father.

At the age of 13 she started keeping a diary, which now serves her as a memory-jogger and serves the reader, from the few snippets divulged, as a guide to the metamorphosis from bewildered child to contented novelist.

From the sparse narrative accompanying these diary snippets we see how Miss du Maurier, from an astonishingly early age, felt drawn to houses of character and peopled them with earlier inhabitants whose portraits adorned the walls. A lively imagination, aided by a prodigious appetite for reading, produced, in succession, heroic poetry, soulful sonnets, short stories, and finally novels.

Human relationships proved difficult. As she matured she seemed to attract mostly men who required mothering. Life was further complicated by her dislike of London and her father's continual monitoring of her movements, even after she reached 21.

She was a restless girl, constantly escaping to France on one pretext or another or going to stay with family friends in country houses which were too lavish, and added to the sense of impermanence. Then, one year, the family rented a house for a summer holiday in Cornwall and, joy of joys, decided to buy a house on the coast that Daphne had fallen in love with.

Overnight, everything fell into place. Cornwall, Daphne decided, was where she belonged. She lived in old clothes, took up sailing, and hit it off at once with the natives. Deliriously happy, she sank roots — and began to write seriously, the years of floundering now seen as a perfect apprenticeship period. Living alone in the family house she organized her days with professional thoroughness, writing morning and evening and sailing, exploring and visiting during the afternoons.

It was in that house that she wrote her first novel with a Cornish theme, a novel that produced some financial independence. Also a Guards officer who had read the novel felt impelled to sail his yacht to Cornwall to see its locale and, hopefully, to meet its author.

They did meet. The officer told her to stop what she was doing and come for a sail. It was the first time any man near her own age had ordered her to do anything, and she loved it and fell like a ton of bricks. A few months later she married the man, "Boy" Browning, who was to become a general and receive a knighthood for his deeds in the Second World War.

Before her officer had come upon the scene Miss du Maurier had discovered an intriguing house. The gates were padlocked and the lodge was empty but, deciding to trespass, she found a way in, walked along the three-mile-long driveway past tall trees and neglected, over-grown areas as dark and dank as a rain-forest. The reward was the sight of a large house, almost completely concealed by ivy and obviously unused for years. Its name was Menabilly.

She visited the house often, peopled it with characters from her imagination, evolved an idea for a novel and put it at the back of her mind for future use. In due course she and her husband bought the house, stripped the ivy from its walls and laid the ghosts with the laughter of their children. And one day, when she felt ready, she sat down to write Rebecca:

"Last night I dreamt I went to Manderley again. It seemed to me I stood by the iron gate leading to the drive, and for a while I could not enter for the way was barred to me..."

For Daphne du Maurier the barrier had been more than a padlocked gate; it had been more than 20 years of searching for a satisfying design for living. In retrospect, it was nothing but growing pains: the shaping of a writer.

The whole story is recounted charmingly and tellingly in a slim volume with a beautiful economy of words; a delicate gem of a memoir.

Promise and Peril of Genetic Tinkering

By JULIAN REID

We are living in the early stages of a scientific and technological revolution — the most profoundly significant such revolution in our century, perhaps in all human history to date. Like all of its kind, it is rich both in long-term promise and in short-term peril.

The key to this revolution is known technically as "recombinant DNA research." But its implications are more clearly indicated by the popular nickname, "genetic engineering."

And since improving on Nature, by Robert Cooke, is the first comprehensive popular introduction to this important new science, it deserves to be read. After all, despite the fact that it is awkwardly organized, annoyingly repetitious, and sometimes rather condescendingly written-down, it at least has the virtue of providing a clear and reasonably complete survey of a subject which may literally change our lives.

Both the promise and the peril of genetic engineering grow out of newly developed techniques which make it possible to transplant genes from one living cell into another. This puts the keys to the innermost mechanisms of life itself within the biologists' grasp.

For genes are more than just units of heredity; biochemical blueprints which dictate how every living organism in the world is constructed and grows. They are also the internal foremen which direct the precise workings of each and every living cell — and through them the complex physiologies of all life, from primitive algae to flowers and birds and men.

Genetic engineering entails meddling with the biological controls which have sustained the living world through three billion years of productive evolution. The vital barriers separating individual from individual, species from species, are on the point of falling. Already, on the cellular level, scientists have succeeded in creating "impossible" hybrids between disparate species —

monstrous potentials of the emerging new "biotechnology," even though the gulf between single-celled laboratory freaks and full-grown organisms is enormous, and it will be a long time, if ever, before it is finally bridged.

To date, however, most of the research has been performed on lowly bacteria — as it will continue to be, at least for the next few years. Beyond that, the most exciting prospects for near-future applications of genetic engineering lie in its potential for producing new or greatly improved varieties of foodplants — "superfoods," as they have already been christened.

Meanwhile, "recombinant DNA" research at the bacterial level continues the world around. Some of its present and prospective achievements are described by Cooke.

Already researchers have produced and patented a new oil-eating bacterium to clean up oil-spills; they are now working on other varieties which will extract precious metals from low-grade ores. Pharmaceutical companies hope to construct large-scale bacterial "factories" for producing medicines, hormones, and other chemicals. New breeds of nitrogen-fixing bacteria, capable of living in symbiosis with such important crop-plants as wheat and rice, may eliminate the need for nitrogenous fertilizers in agriculture. And so it goes, an ambitious catalogue of tenders for the opening stages of the second Genesis.

Such is the immediate promise of genetic engineering. As for its immediate perils, most concern has centered around the danger that some man-made "Andromeda Strain" — perhaps a cancer-carrying bacterium — might escape from a laboratory somewhere and ravage the world.

To guard against this eventuality, however remote it may be, national governments in the U.S., the U.K., and elsewhere have imposed limited controls on some categories of recombinant DNA research. Cooke outlines the recommended safeguards. On the whole, they seem fair and generally adequate — but they are binding only on publicly-funded researchers, and then only in those nations and municipalities which have shown foresight enough to institute them.

Despite loud protests from both scientists and commercial interests, such limited precautions are frighteningly inadequate. "What is at stake," as biologist Ruth Hubbard reminds us, "is not freedom of inquiry, but the freedom of a few scientists in a hurry, to endanger other people." And the immediate challenge facing us is that of developing, and enforcing, adequate regulatory codes which can minimize the perils of this awesome new technology without interfering unnecessarily with the realization of its almost incalculable potentials for the betterment of the world.

But ultimately the challenge is much broader — and essentially an ethical one. One concerned scientist, Dr. Erwin Chargaff of Columbia University, put it in a nutshell: "Our time is cursed with the necessity for feeble men, masquerading as experts, to make enormously far-reaching decisions. Is there anything more far-reaching than the creation of new forms of life?"

The real need is for wisdom — a commodity which seems to be in uncomfortably short supply these days. The genetic engineers are on the point of usurping one of the most fundamental prerogatives of God — are they yet ready to assume the corresponding burden of responsibility which goes along with it?

'Godfather' Craps Out

Mario Puzo, who spent many months writing The Godfather, has written a book on Las Vegas that has all the appearance of being put together in a single day. Running 245 pages, the glossy coffee-table epic contains 150 photographs interspersed by a rambling, dead-dull text.

One can picture Mario calling together his group of three photographers, and four research girls and saying:

"Have the pictures and research stuff on my desk by 9 a.m. Friday because I want to finish the book by noon. Got an important golfing date Friday afternoon."

Some of the book was pre-written, being a Playboy magazine article.

The rest is research notes, inserted almost without re-writing, it would appear. There is the familiar history of Las Vegas, including Bugsy Siegel and his Flamingo Hotel, the first major one on the Strip.

There are also some notes on the geography of Vegas, followed by gambling anecdotes of Mario's childhood and a defence of gambling in general.

Also included is a short history of world gambling, apparently written by a research clerk, plus casino staff anecdotes, possibly picked up by the photographers.

The only creativity in the book is the pictures. And even here imagination is lacking. Most of the pictures of casino staff members are posed and flat.

By AL FORREST

There are half a dozen good photographs of gamblers in action but six pictures do not make a book. Especially when it is selling for $16.95.

Inside Las Vegas is clearly designed to cash in on the popularity of large glossy books that was launched by Norman Mailer's best-seller on Marilyn Monroe.

This exploitation, however, is so crude that it is unlikely to fool anyone.

A quick glance through the pages of Inside Las Vegas will show it is filler copy between pictures of only moderate interest.

Inside Las Vegas is clearly an offering the reader can afford to refuse. In short it is a rip-off and an expensive one at that.

INSIDE LAS VEGAS, by Mario Puzo. Grosset & Dunlap. $16.95.

Enola Gay Was No Lady, And We Can Never Forget

By JOHN BARKHAM

Twenty years ago the name of Enola Gay was still remembered around the world. Today a new generation probably wonders who the lady was. Enola Gay was no lady: it was the name given to the airplane which dropped the first atom bomb on Japan. It demolished most of the city of Hiroshima, and the subsequent one dropped on Nagasaki abruptly ended the war. To date those are the only two atom bombs ever used in warfare.

At the time all that mattered to Americans was that the bomb had ended the Second World War on a spectacular note of triumph. What could not then have been foreseen was that the secrets of the bomb and of its deadlier nuclear successor would pass into Soviet hands, and that mutual possession of these awesome weapons would lead to an era of Great Power peace through mutual deterrence.

All that, however, lay in the future when President Franklin D. Roosevelt authorized the development of an atomic weapon. The story of the Manhattan Project, as the program came to be known, has often been told, but never with such a wealth of personal detail as in this book.

Gordon Thomas and Max Morgan Witts specialize in the re-enactment of historic disasters, man-made or otherwise. Enola Gay impresses this reviewer as the most dramatic of all their reconstructions. Moreover, their terrier-like research has yielded new nuggets of knowledge not hitherto publicized about the atomic attack on Japan.

It is not widely known, for example, that Japan, like its ally Germany, had also engaged on research into atomic weaponry. According to Thomas and Witts, the Japanese set in motion their research project only 17 days after President Roosevelt gave the green light to the American team. The Japanese named it Project A and estimated that it would take ten years to bring to fruition since Japan lacked the essential raw material, uranium. Work on Project A continued in desultory fashion until that day in August 1945 when Japan, in a single deadly, blinding instant, discovered — at the receiving end — what atomic warfare was all about.

As an alternative project the Japanese, the authors tell us, had concentrated on a death ray "designed to project an invisible beam that would pluck an aircraft out of the sky by shattering its propellers or killing its crew." This was science-fiction stuff that still eludes would-be inventors.

The story of the Enola Gay and its historic mission is recounted in a day-by-day, step-by-step narrative that is consistently absorbing because the reader is always aware of the shattering climax that lies ahead. Thomas and Witts give equal attention to the American and Japanese characters involved in their story. The emphasis is on persons in high places and low on both sides. No detail, no element of local color, is omitted if deemed significant to the approaching apocalypse.

They make clear, as other writers have done, that the ancient city of Kyoto, Japan's cultural capital, was on the list of cities to be atomized, but that Secretary of War Stimson personally vetoed it as a target. For this we may be grateful. In the European theatre of war there was no Stimson to save the medieval city of Dresden.

It is good to be reminded in this dramatic book that the bomb, long obsolete by today's standards, killed and wounded 80,000 people, destroyed 62,000 buildings, and started fires a mile away. Eight days later Japan, which had been ready to fight to the last man, surrendered. To the Enola Gay's bomb there was, and still is, no answer.

ENOLA GAY, by Gordon Thomas and Max Morgan Witts. McGraw-Hill. $13.75.
